Former Longhorn, Saints kicker pleads guilty

AUSTIN (AP) — A plea agreement between former University of Texas football standout Russell Erxleben and federal prosecutors does not end the investigation of Erxleben's foreign currency trading operation, a state official said Tuesday.

Erxleben pleaded guilty to federal conspiracy and fraud charges and could spend seven years in prison and be ordered to pay $17 million restitution.

Prosecutors accused the former kicker for the Longhorns and the New Orleans Saints of misleading investors by lying about how successful his company's investments were, lying about the risks involved and how the investments would be used.

But more people involved in the investments could be charged, said state Securities Commissioner Denise Voigt Crawford.

"This case is wrapped up with regard to Russell Erxleben, but the investigation is ongoing with other parties," Crawford said. She declined to be more specific.

Seven killed in morning Xerox shooting spree

HONOLULU (AP) — An employee opened fire with a 9 mm handgun inside a Xerox Corp. building Tuesday, killing seven co-workers before fleeing in a company van, authorities said. Two hours later, police surrounded a suspect.

The shootings erupted shortly after 8 a.m. (1 p.m. EST). Five victims were found dead in a conference room in the building on North Nimitz Highway, a few miles from downtown, and two other bodies were found nearby, police said.

"It appears as though it was a disgruntled employee who snuffed," Honolulu Mayor Jeremy Harris said.

Ambulance teams that went into the building found a "grisly" scene, said Richard Soo of the city fire department.

Police identified the gunman as Byron Usugi, describing him as an employee in Xerox's technical services division. Sam Anoulack, another Xerox employee, said Usugi had worked in the building for around 10 years.

WORLD NEWS

Hong Kong woos Disneyland, but critics question price tag

HONG KONG (AP) — The deal Walt Disney Co. struck with Hong Kong to build a major Disney theme park relies on a nearly $3 billion, taxpayer-funded investment by the territory, and just a $314 million infusion from Disney.

Disney may be ensuring that the deal, which gives the entertainment conglomerate its third international theme park location, won't leave it with the losses it suffered when Disneyland Paris began running up big deficits in the mid-1990s.

The venture will include an East-meets-West theme park and a traditional Disney Magic Kingdom castle, giving Disney, which also has a park in Japan, a stronger presence in Asia.

The region is believed to offer Disney its greatest opportunity for growth.

Campus reacts to student death

More than 300 people remember Burrows in memorial service

by Jason Bernstein and Lindsay Rowden
Staff Writers

Audience members observe a moment of silence during Tuesday's memorial service for Michael Burrows.

Amid the quiet of a somber audience rose the hope of gaining something positive out of such a tragedy.

More than 300 Texas Tech students, faculty and others gathered in the University Center Ballroom on Tuesday to memorialize Michael Burrows.

Burrows, an 18-year-old sophomore engineering student from Houston, was killed last Friday in a one-car accident near Caldwell. He was headed to a regional conference for the National Society of Black Engineers along with five other Tech students.

Three students in Friday's accident remain in fair condition at St. Joseph's Hospital in Bryan: Brian Vinson, 20, of Dallas; Darryl Banks, 18, of DeSoto; and Taimon Mosley, 21, of Missouri City. The other two students in the car have been released.

The Tech chapter of NSBE sponsored the memorial service. Ebonie Lewis, a sophomore pre-pharmacy major from Dallas, planned the service.

"I think it is good for everyone to come together, especially those people unable to come to the funeral," Lewis said. "It was originally supposed to be a small candlelight service, but it is so nice that so many people have come to remember him."

The Visions of Light Gospel Choir Praise Team performed two songs at the service. Audience members hugged, held hands and remembered Burrows' life.

Rev. Corey Powell, pastor of Community Baptist Church in Lubbock, paid tribute to Burrows. He encouraged the Tech and Lubbock communities to pray for everyone affected by the accident. He said the service should serve as a reminder to make the most of each day.

"Live each day as though it's your last, for one day it will be — seize the day," Powell said.

Burrows became involved with the engineering society as a freshman and had goals of increasing group membership.

"He's put 100 percent toward NSBE since his first day," said Howard Gibbs, a sophomore engineering major from Fort Worth and vice president of the NSBE chapter at Tech.

Accidents revive driving bill

by Andy Jones
Staff Writer

On Aug. 19, Baylor University students Adrienne Barna, Miriam Hebert and Katherine Herlihy, were involved in a fatal accident.

On Oct. 9, Baylor lost four more students. Tricia Calp, Emily Hollister, Erika Lanham and Drunk Wostal were killed when they were struck by a truck while trying to cross the street.

Southwest Texas University student William Flores and Texas A&M student Ted Bruton also were killed in the same accident.

On Friday, Texas Tech student Michael Burrows died and five others were injured when the vehicle they were traveling in veered off the roadway, vaulted across a dry creek bed and came to rest against a tree.

The death of 10 Texas college students all have one thing in common — they were all the result of fatigue.

In all three incidents, the driver had fallen asleep and in the case of the accident involving Burrows, the passengers also were asleep.

Burrows' death comes almost one year after the Tech Student Senate passed Resolution 34.08, the Lupe Medina Bill for Driving Safety. The program was initiated at Texas A&M, "which calls for motels around the state to offer student discounts to students traveling late at night on weekends and during Winter and Spring break."

Baylor and Southwest Texas also have passed similar resolutions.

The bill also called for Tech's University Life Committee to work in conjunction with the Texas A&M Student Senate to publicize the program and expand the number of motels involved.

"We are making a full-force effort in making students aware (of the bill)," said Rob Ferguson, a member of the Texas A&M Student Senate.

He said the program has deals with 10 motels statewide: five Super 8 Motels located in Navasota, Temple, New Braunfels, Amarillo and College Station and five Hampton Inns in College Station, Corpus Christi, Austin, Longview and Laredo.

With a valid student ID, these hotels will offer discounts to any college student from anywhere in the nation.

Ferguson said a conference call on Thursday hopefully will cement a deal with the entire region of Super 8 motels, which include Texas, Oklahoma and Nebraska.

"It's a joint effort to try and get as many motels as possible involved (in the program)," Ferguson said.

In response to the accidents that have occurred this fall, Ferguson said A&M had a "Drowsy Driving Awareness Day" on Oct. 20, and he has spoken with members of the Tech Senate about helping Tech have their own awareness day.

"We would like to help Texas Tech have a 'Drowsy Driving Awareness Day,'" Ferguson said.

He said driving drowsy can be just as bad as driving drunk.

Carrie Evans, Student Government Association internal vice president and Student Senate president, said she has been in contact with Ferguson about a possible "Drowsy Driving Awareness Day" at Tech.

"We are planning to have a day either before finals or Thanksgiving," Evans said.

Amendments pass, Tech to receive additional funding

by Andy Jones
Staff Writer

Two state amendments passed Tuesday that will have a positive financial impact on Texas Tech.

Voters approved Proposition 13, which authorizes an extra $400 million in bonds for student financial aid.

Chancellor John Montford said the amendment will help students in Texas.

"We have to continue a good student loan program in the state of Texas," he said.

Another amendment that passed will not directly bring any funding to Tech, but may have ensured some additional state funding.

Proposition 17 will give the regents at the University of Texas and Texas A&M University systems more flexibility in managing assets of the Permanent University Fund.

The amendment will allow the UT and A&M systems to invest PUF money into high-risk, quick-return investments. This might increase the amount of available funds for non-land grant state universities such as Tech.

Chancellor Montford said the proposition in effect allows A&M and UT to spend down some of their capital. He said he was in favor of Proposition 17 so Tech would receive some of the available funds.

Montford said Tech will receive a $4.2 million excellence fund as a result of the new amendment.

"We didn't get all that we wanted, but what we did get will help with the employment of some new faculty," he said.

Every public Texas college or university will receive an excellence fund with the amount depending on the schools enrollment.

Voters also cleared up a lingering question in the 123-year-old Texas Constitution, specifying that the lieutenant governor would assume the governor's office if there's a vacancy in the state's top job.

Proposition 1 on the constitutional amendment ballot was being approved by a 72.5 percent to 27.5 percent margin with

Drug arrest sidelines Tech player

by Matt Green
Staff Writer

A Texas Tech football player was arrested Monday after police discovered drugs in his apartment.

Derrick Dewayne Briggs, a sophomore defensive back from Dayton, was charged with possession of marijuana and cocaine.

The Lubbock Police Department SWAT team executed a search warrant at Briggs' apartment at 4:20 p.m. Monday in the 4400 block of 21st Street.

Officers secured the apartment before conducting a search. Briggs told officers his roommate, who also plays football for Tech, was out of town, according to police reports.

During the search, officers found a half-smoked cigar filled with marijuana on a bread box in the kitchen.

Police also discovered two resealable plastic bags containing marijuana next to a stereo speaker in the living room, along with scales and a tray containing cigars.

A shoe box containing 31.91 grams of marijuana, .42 grams of cocaine and a roll of plastic bags was later discovered.

Briggs faces third-degree felony charges for possession of cocaine, which is punishable by two to 10 years imprisonment and a fine not to exceed $10,000. Because Briggs' apartment is within 1,000 feet of Maxey Park, a drug-free zone, the maximum penalty is increased.

Had the arrest taken place outside the drug-free zone, the possession of less than two ounces of marijuana would have been a class B misdemeanor, punishable by a $2,000 fine and 180 days in jail.

A statement released by Tech Athletic Relations said Briggs has been suspended indefinitely from the team for violation of team policy.

Tech Director of Athletics Gerald Myers said his department cannot comment on any further action at this time.

"We have no comment other than what was said in the press release," Myers said.

Police have not released the name of Briggs' roommate, who also is a suspect.

Bill Morgan, public information officer for the LPD, said this case is not receiving any more police attention than any other.

"This is no different than it would be for anyone else," Morgan said. "It's just business as usual."

HSC budget up despite lack of state funding

by Andrew Thompson
Staff Writer

Even though the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board will give the Texas Tech Health Sciences Center less than 1 percent of last year's grant, the HSC's budget is up $2 million from 1998.

Last year, the HSC was awarded about $1.2 million in funds for different projects, said Barbara Pence, HSC vice president for research.

Even though the HSC will only receive $78,975 this year, it is not all bad news, Pence said.

"We have to keep in mind that any funds we are granted are never guaranteed," she said. "If nobody submits a proposal to the coordinating board, we don't receive any money."

Only two out of 34 reviewed proposals were awarded funds by the THECB this year. Other proposals were submitted, Pence said, but for unknown reasons, were not reviewed. Also, the 34 reviewed proposals are almost half of the proposals looked at in 1997.

The $78,975 granted to HSC this year is the lowest amount given to any health-related institution of higher education in Texas.

The THECB had more than $60 million to distribute to institutions and universities who submitted proposals for research funds.

Pence said she is extremely concerned the public might think the overall research done by HSC is poor because of the THECB's small award.

"I'm worried what people will think of this," she said. "The coordinating board's funding is only one source of many where we compete for funds. And it's also important that people know that biomedicine is one of the most competitive areas for institutions vying for research dollars."

Pence said funding for the Health Sciences Center is up by more than $2 million, because of grants by the National Institute of Health.

Pence said because the HSC has received more money from NIH shows the center is doing significant research.

"We compete for every dollar, so this should show we are doing good work," she said.

John Walls, associate director for News and Publications for the HSC, said people should keep the coordinating board's decision in perspective.

"Our number of submissions to the THECB was way down because we've been extremely successful in securing grants from the NIH," Walls said. "Also, there are some projects that are attracting attention from all over."

For instance, Dr. David Straus had his research published in a British medical journal about sick building syndrome.

Straus completed a study on 48 buildings where the quality of the air and the amount of bacteria growing in those buildings can cause chronic illnesses.

Walls said Straus and his team of researchers are contacted periodically with people who are worried that their house or building they work in may be "sick."

Another researcher, Dr. Doug Stocco, identified a protein that will help scientists understand the body's steroid development. Walls said Stocco's discovery has led to researchers utilizing Stocco's work worldwide.

"He's sought out at conferences across the country," Walls said.

"Our dream was for NSBE to be large, and look at it today — our dreams came true, and it is so ironic that it happened this way."

Zelvis Applin, a senior music major from Fort Worth and friend of Burrows, dedicated a song to Burrows during the service.

"There were many times when I was walking across campus sad, depressed, and he'd pick me up," he said. "He was a blessing in my life."

Applin said there was one characteristic he'll never forget.

"His socks," he said. "He always wore those knee-high socks. They made me laugh every time."

two-thirds of the votes counted.

The amendment could be useful fairly soon if Republican Gov. George W. Bush is successful in his bid for the White House next year.

The amendment requires the lieutenant governor to forfeit that office if he or she fills a permanent vacancy in the governor's office.

The post of lieutenant governor — the presiding officer of the Texas Senate — then would be filled within 30 days by an election among the 31 senators.

The constitution, written in 1876, had said that in the case of a gubernatorial vacancy, the lieutenant governor "exercises the powers and authority" of the governor.

Backers of the amendment said it was needed to provide certainty for the succession of the governor's office and make it clear that a lieutenant governor who moves up to fill a permanent vacancy for governor cannot hold both state offices. Opponents said the amendment was unnecessary because in the past, the lieutenant governor has become governor and a senator has filled his place without problems.

SPOTLIGHT ON STUDENTS

Bobbi Crill, a graduate student in merchandising, was selected as the J.C. Penny Outstanding Summer Intern at both the district and regional levels. She is one of only four students in the country competing for the national award which will be presented in November. She received $1,500 in scholarship awards and will appear on a J.C. Penny poster that will be displayed in all J.C. Penny stores and college placement offices in the nation. Bobbi was also the College of Human Sciences' top honor graduate and banner bearer for the August 1999 graduating class.

Brenda Schumann, an agricultural communications major, was recently elected as President of the National Organization of Agricultural Communicators of Tomorrow.

Arturo Araujo, Cerissa Macon, Lisa Patton and Miranda Sherertz, are recipients of scholarships from the American Hotel Foundation. These students, all Restaurant, Hotel and Institutional Management Program majors, were also featured in the September 1999 issue of Lodging.

Michael Negretti, a graduate student in human development and family studies, is serving as the Student/Young Professional Representative to the Texas Association of Marriage and Family Therapy Board.

Arthur James, Rodney Shephard, Cerissa Macon and Kristin Reasoner were awarded scholarships from the Hotel/Motel Association of Greater Dallas. Forty-one percent of students chosen to receive scholarships from the organization this year are from Texas Tech's Restaurant, Hotel, Institutional Management Program.

R.N. Hopper, agronomy major, and Geoff Haney, agricultural economics major, are completing Congressional Internships in Washington, D.C. during the Fall 1999 semester.

Drug use may prevent Tech students from receiving aid

by Brandon Formby
Contributing Writer

Some concerns and controversy surround a new rule passed by the U.S. Department of Education depriving college students' eligibility for federal financial aid if they have drug convictions on their records.

The rule, authored by U.S. Rep. Mark Souder, R-Indiana, will deny students with certain kinds of drug convictions federal financial aid including Pell Grants and student loans.

"This is a tool and a form of accountability," said Angela Flood, Souder's press secretary. "As a student, if you receive financial aid and you are using or selling drugs, then you are not making good use of taxpayer's money."

Under the rule, which was published in the Oct. 21 edition of the Federal Register, a U.S. Department of Education publication, students will face one year of financial aid ineligibility for a single drug-possession conviction, two years for two convictions and permanent ineligibility for a third conviction. Students who are convicted of selling drugs will face a two-year ineligibility period after the first conviction and permanent ineligibility after the second.

"I think that's awesome," said

Apryl Lynes, a junior mechanical engineering major from Sunray. "Losing financial aid for a year might shock them into thinking, 'Hey, I don't have the money for this.'"

A provision in the rule allows the suspension period to be shortened or terminated if the conviction is overturned, set aside or removed from the student's record. Completion of a drug rehabilitation program also may shorten the period of ineligibility.

"You may regain eligibility prior to the end of the suspension period if you successfully complete a rehab program and test negative for drug use twice," Floods said.

While Floods said the rule was developed to show college students the consequences for their actions, some concerns over the technical aspects involved have been raised. The rule allows students to self-certify their eligibility and does not require institutions to question applicants.

In addition, institutions will not be held responsible for funds disbursed to students who are not eligible, but claimed they are.

Some Tech students did not think the self-certification will be effective.

"Who's going to check yes?" said Shelby Walters, a sophomore mechanical engineering major from Dallas. "That's not going to help much."

Floods said the original rule did not rely on self-certification. But concerns about manpower and expenses from institutions caused the change.

"I'm short-staffed anyway," said Earl Hudgins, Tech's director of Financial Aid.

"There's no way we could check that. I don't know of any university that has that manpower. Even if you contract out, there would be a lot of expense and time."

While Hudgins said the rule was part of the war on drugs intending to show people consequences for their actions, he also said the federal government would have to hold some responsibility if self-certification was abandoned.

"If the U.S. Department of Education or Congress feels it's important, then they need to fund that," he said. "If it is determined to be for national good, this is something they have to do. They should check eligibility and give us the results. We can deal with the results."

Floods said Souder was going to look at the approved provisions, including self-certification by the students, closely.

"It's not clear what action will be taken, but it is a concern of his," she said.

Federalists society to sponsor First Amendment debate

The Federalist Society for Law and Public Policy will sponsor a free-speech debate and speech at 4 p.m. today in the Law School Forum, located in Texas Tech's School of Law.

The speech will feature Thomas West, a professor of politics at the University of Dallas and senior fellow at the Claremont Institute.

West will speak about the state of the First Amendment in the United States and apply his interpretation of the founding fathers' views about those rights.

Kate Fairborn, president of The Federalist Society, said West looks at things from the perspective of what he thinks the founders' intentions were.

"We try to introduce ideas that you just won't hear in the classroom," she said. "Teaching law is based on black-and-white philosophy."

West said the point of his presentation is something the average student won't hear in the classroom.

Fairborn said the presentation is free and will last 30 to 45 minutes. A question and answer session will follow West's presentation.

"We encourage people to ask as many questions as they like," Fairborn said.

Let's have a good time!

We can praise and worship God with joy and thanksgiving... come on by!

Life's worth a little empathy

Have you ever felt misunderstood. That someone just didn't understand your situation? I'm placing my bets that your answer is "yes."

(If you checked "no" then just skip the humorous quip that follows my name and then read the sports section, OK?)

Andrew Thompson
Staff Writer

Ever think that those who you think don't understand you feel the same about you? Again, my lunch money leans toward a healthy "yup," or even an "amen."

Hold that thought and ponder these two situations.

A Christian minister who has publicly denounced anyone who is homosexual, and even went as far as publishing a story that a character on a popular children's television show is gay, recently met with a group of Christian ministers.

Big deal, right? Exactly. Those ministers, from all over the United States, hinder themselves Christian and homosexual. So the big deal is the fact that the two parties actually met to discuss their views on a rather highly-controversial subject. There was little mudslinging, and even a few hugs.

Situation No.2. Two high school football teams met on the field for a game near Dallas. One team had more than 1,000 fans, while the other didn't even have cheerleaders.

Big deal, right? Exactly. One of the teams is made up of criminals: convicted thieves, arsonists, vandals and gang members. The boys, all assigned to the Gainesville State School, have been given the chance to play football as a reward for good behavior and for therapy.

They haven't won a game since 1997, but who's counting? They play against other high schools in legitimate conference games. There's probably little hope for a state championship in the future, or even ever, but the point is not about winning. It's about understanding.

These kids have been misunderstood or broken homes and grew up near crime and drugs.

The homosexual ministers have been called every name in the book, from "Satan's minions" to just plain "evil."

But some people are beginning to look past those distinctions and are looking to understand that behind everyone's label, there is a human being. A person.

Perhaps not like you or me or anyone. But still, a person.

Still have that thought in your head about being misunderstood or thinking that others may think the same of you?

Good. Remember that the next time you judge someone.

Remember that the next time you feel despair.

Remember that you, and everyone around you, is a person.

But most of all, remember there are people who will listen and, just maybe, understand.

Damn, I need to take my own advice.

Andrew Thompson is senior philosophy major from San Antonio. He's convinced that only his neighbor's turtles understand him when he has a problem.

Vaccination suggested for health

A recent "20/20" report on ABC reported the risks of the disease meningococcus and the uses of the vaccine for it. We at Student Health Services have received calls from concerned parents and students, so it is important to address these issues and clear up any questions and misconceptions.

Meningococcus is a bacterial infection usually infecting young children and the elderly. However, young adults living in close quarters like residence halls also are at an increased risk of the infection.

College students living in residence halls have an increased risk of infection — from one chance in 100,000 to three chances in 100,000.

College students not living in residence halls have no increased risk.

Statistically, the city of Lubbock should have two to three cases each year, but generally has been below average in the past five years.

There are several strains of meningococcus — A, B, C, W and Y. The vaccine does not cover B, which is the most common strain in the United States and would prevent less than half the current cases of meningococcus per year. A vaccine for Type B is being developed, but is not ready yet.

Nationally, there are around 2,600 reported cases each year, mostly in small children under age four. If an epidemic were ever to occur (an epidemic being defined as 10 per 100,000), the Texas Health Department would recommend widespread vaccination.

As it stands now, the Center for Disease Control and the American College Health Association recently has met to discuss meningococcus and how it relates to college students. The CDC has made the recommendation that all college students living in residence halls consider obtaining the meningococcus vaccine, Menomune.

It has been reported that the vaccine helped in the military. Most cases outside the United States are caused by Type A, which is in the vaccine. The vaccine was created to decrease the number of cases in military personnel abroad.

The vaccine should be used in all people with complement deficiency (a rare blood disease), those with their spleen removed and people with HIV or cancer. These patients should be immunized every three to five years.

The job of health education and Student Health Services is to educate and inform you, not to send you into a panic with exaggerated information. We are informing every residence hall student at Texas Tech about this information and providing them the option to get the vaccine.

If a student requests the vaccine, they must make an appointment with Student Health Services in Thompson Hall during the weeks of Nov. 15 through Dec. 17. The shot will cost each student $60 and must be paid at the time of vaccination. Students also may check into getting the vaccine with their hometown health care provider.

One other note about shots. Student Health Services has received our flu vaccine, so students can call 743-2848 to make an appointment for a flu shot. The cost to students is $7 and could save lots of grief and keep you well if you get one before the upcoming holidays and finals.

Everyone also is gearing up to begin registering for spring. We have 2,700 students who are not in compliance with requirements for MMR (measles, mumps, rubella) shots. If you have not provided shot records to Student Health or received your shot from us, you will have a hold on your registration. I suggest that you take care of this right away so you can register.

On a Role

To the editor: In reference to frustration with the Spike Dykes-led football team and its mediocre record, calling on the university to replace the coach is the quick answer, but not necessarily the right response. Alumni have a role to play in all of this, and the unpleasant truth is that our financial donations to the university are what is going to keep the Red Raiders competing with other Big 12 schools, not only on the playing field, but also in the fields of research and academic achievement. UT and A&M are powerhouses both athletically and academically in great part because of high alumni support. They can afford to recruit the best players and coaches, the best students and professors because of intensive fund raising among a highly-enthusiastic, well-organized and well-networked group of former students who don't want anything but the best for their alma mater. Aggie jokes are a hoot to hear and tell, and long live competition between us, but all the times we were laughing at the dummies down in College Station, those dummies put together one damn fine university, a degree from which is respected nationally. In a radio-broadcast piece on viticulture recently aired on National Public Radio, one of the agriculture specialists chosen to comment on a particularly threatening disease to Texas grapes was from Texas A&M. People in other parts of the country will only think to interview the Texas Tech agriculture specialist when students who grow into ex-students start supporting the school through the alumni association, networking, recruiting and their pockets.

Ag conference educates on leadership, perseverance

Did you know that agriculture is cultivating some of the brightest young leaders in the nation?

That's right and 40,000 of them were on hand for the 72nd National FFA convention in Louisville, Ky., last week. Like any good columnist, I attended with pen and paper to capture the essence of the event and present you with my observations.

Cody Nash
Columnist

The event has been held annually for the last 71 years in Kansas City, Mo., so the scenery was a little different for some of the agriculture science teachers, past FFA members and officers. But to current FFA members it was pure heaven. Heaven in the sense that they were awarded several days out of class to make the trip and also because the convention combined their current interests with parts and pieces of their potential futures in the agricultural industry. Attendants had the opportunity to hear from noteworthy speakers such as actor Danny Glover and mountain climber Jamie Clark. One student said, "Glover spoke too much about his childhood memories of the farm and not enough about what agriculture is like today." My assumption was that the students were fascinated to be in the same room as a real live movie star, regardless of what he said. This is the perfect example of what the FFA can do for young people. The organization takes students out of their one-dimensional world and provides them with the chance of a lifetime.

I personally listened to Jamie Clark speak about his adventures as one of the few men to ever climb Mount Everest. He energized the audience as he talked about facing his fears and fighting his way to the top of the mountain and spoke passionately about the life-and-death instances he encountered. To conclude his talk, he described the internal peace that overwhelmed him while looking down on the rest of the world from the summit. I wondered at that moment how that could relate to all of us climbing our way to the top here at Texas Tech.

Clark did a nice job of driving his message home to the students when he told them that each and every one of us must climb our own mountains in life. At times, it may seem like we will never reach the top of the mountain called much less the summit called graduation. Clark fell short of the summit twice before reaching the top, and on his second attempt, his crew ran out of toilet paper less than halfway up the slope. With a chuckle he said, "each attempt was a learning experience." He continued to focus on his goal and the motivation that drove him to make his graduation reality.

Too often, I fear that we as college students run out of toilet paper halfway up the hill, descend for a few more rolls and decide what the heck, it's warmer at the bottom. Whether it's a test, a job-term project, a relationship, a job interview or just the every day stuff like going to class, looking the challenge in the eye and keep climbing your way to the top of that mountain.

Wow, I only attended three of the nine sessions at the convention and look how much motivation I brought home. Imagine what those high school teen-agers must be thinking right now. Most students who attend that convention each year return feeling that they can conquer the world, and if they took advantage of the full convention experience, they should have the tools to do so.

Along with the convention sessions and speakers, there also was a career show that hosted more than 300 of today's leading companies from all aspects of agriculture. Representatives from these companies interacted one-on-one with students, passing out information about careers and encouraging students to further their education and join the industry. My favorite booth contained the John Deere-sponsored race car that boasted the FFA emblem on the hood. As if all of this were not enough, students also had the chance to attend free concerts performed by Ricochet, Sherri Austin and Diamond Rio. All in all, it was an action-packed adventure for some of America's brightest young leaders.

Some people may think that FFA was just a dorky club that farm kids joined back in high school, but as a college freshman, a past officer and a lifetime member of the FFA, I can tell you that if you have not been to the National FFA convention to see the future unfold, then you ain't seen nothing yet!

Local food bank opens eyes, feeds souls

by Angela Loston
Staff Writer

For Erricos Durham, giving time to the community is both an eye-opening and rewarding experience, especially since he has volunteered at the South Plains Food Bank.

"When you go to the food bank and see all of the food going out to the needy, it kind of gives you a better perspective," said Durham, a senior petroleum engineering major from Gonzales. "It also gives a lot of spiritual fulfillment knowing that you are helping out."

Durham and other members of Texas Tech's Society of Petroleum Engineers will work from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m.

Thursday at the South Plains Food Bank, located at 4612 Locust Ave.

The food bank distributes food packages and meals to underprivileged individuals and families in the Lubbock area.

"I think for first-timers, it's a wake-up call for them because they realize, 'Hey, there are needy people out there, and hey, people do need my help,'" Durham said.

Other Tech students will volunteer from 9 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Saturday at the food bank for Community Action Day.

"We find that the Tech students are wonderful," said Sellie Shine, director of external relations for the South Plains Food Bank Inc. "These are eager and willing students. They have fun, and they come with a good attitude."

Shine said the students volunteering at the food bank will prepare food boxes that will be distributed to needy families and some senior citizens within the area. She said most of the food boxes are being prepared for the upcoming Christmas season.

Daniel Brown, activities coordinator for Campus Activities and Involvement, said about 50 volunteers will be involved with the event.

He said most of the students are members of various student organizations on campus.

"It's a real learning opportunity for students to get to work in the community and to see the work that the food bank does and see how much food is donated," Brown said. "It provides the students with a unique opportunity."

Through working at the food bank, Shine said, volunteers are able to gain awareness of people who are in need of assistance.

"I think it is important for students and individuals to be aware of the plight of the people who are not as fortunate as they are," Shine said. "As citizens, I think it is important for people to have concern for others."

Other Community Action Days are scheduled for Nov. 13 and Nov. 20. To become involved with this community-service activity, students can sign up in 228 University Center or call 742-3621 for more information.

Volleyball set for Aggie battle

by Jeff Keller
Staff Writer

After a straight-game road loss to Nebraska over the weekend, the Texas Tech volleyball squad (14-10 overall, 4-8 Big 12) will try to regroup and pick up a win against No. 14 Texas A&M at 7 p.m. today in College Station.

In the loss to Nebraska, the Red Raiders were held to a .036 hitting percentage as the Cornhuskers needed only one hour and 23 minutes to defeat Tech.

Tech lost in straight games to the Aggies in the teams' first meeting this season in Lubbock.

In that match, the Aggies needed only one hour and 17 minutes to dispose of Tech in front of 663 fans, Tech's largest home crowd of the season.

The past two seasons, Tech has dropped its home match with the Aggies only to travel to College Station and defeat them.

Middle blocker Janelle Jones said having beaten A&M on the road the past two years gives the Red Raiders confidence this year as they travel to Aggieland.

"We know that we can go down there and beat them on their home court," Jones said. "We know we need to pick up some wins against ranked teams. I think knowing that we have beaten them there before just builds our confidence and our desire."

Tech has split its first two matches of the second part of the Big 12 Conference season after going 3-7 in the first half.

Tech won its first match of the second half in five games against Kansas State a week ago.

In the match, freshman outside hitter Ann Romjue suffered an injury to her stomach muscle.

Romjue played in all three games against Nebraska and said she will play against the Aggies as well.

"I strained my stomach muscle against Kansas State, but I am still going to play against A&M," Romjue said. "It's an annoying injury, but I can play through it. I'll be OK."

Tech coach Jeff Nelson said Romjue is tough, but he will watch her closely in case the injury gets worse.

"She's a tough kid, and she will be

Raiders remember Payton's career

by Patrick Gonzales
Staff Writer

The word "sweetness" can be used to describe many things.

But in the National Football League it described Walter Payton, the league's all-time leading rusher.

Even though he has passed on, he will continue to live in the hearts and minds of the Red Raiders as an inspiration and a great athlete.

Even though he retired from the NFL 12 years ago, several Texas Tech football players, who grew up idolizing Payton, were saddened by his death.

Tech running back Sammy Morris said along with Barry Sanders, Payton was his favorite running back.

"We were all sitting in the dining hall today watching his highlights on television, and it was just sad to see him go like that," said Morris, who is second on the squad with 451 yards.

"He was the greatest running back of all time, and it's just crazy to think that he's gone."

Morris never had a personal encounter with Payton but said his mom met the star in San Antonio during a promotional tour.

Morris, who was in the fourth grade at the time, said his mom got him an autographed postcard of Payton with his Lamborghini.

Quarterback Rob Peters said Payton's career not only affected future running backs but also the entire generation who grew up watching him.

"He was the first guy that was one of our generation's heroes," Peters said. "You can remember watching him as a little kid and all the great things he did... he'll be remembered for all time."

Peters also said he will always remember Payton for the headbands he used to wear.

Tech cornerback Oscar Solis said he idolized many running backs growing up, but he'll always remember Payton for his strong work ethic.

Solis said he remembered seeing a video of Payton running up a mountain as part of his workout regime.

Solis said Payton could only make the uphill trek once a week because the workout was so physically draining.

"That's the kind of work ethic he had, and it helped me realize that you

Don't lose faith: Tech's full of surprises

OK. So the Tech football team got slaughtered by one of the worst teams in the Big 12. Is anyone really surprised at this point? If you are, you might as well get over it.

This year's Raiders are probably the most talented inconsistent team in Tech history.

They have running backs that have rushed for more than 200 yards in a single game.

They have a defense that has stopped some of the best offenses in the conference and, on occasion, has scored points on fumble recoveries.

They have lost games they were picked to win and won games they were picked as underdogs.

There's no telling what this squad will do next. When the Raiders are hot, they're hot. And when they're not, it tends to get a little ugly out on the gridiron.

After the Raiders lost to North

Amy Curry
Staff Writer

and Dykes' coaching ability were back in the stands and more faithful than ever.

However, the Raiders' renewed godly stature was short-lived.

And their win-loss trend continues. All season, it's been the same story.

The Raiders take a decisive win against a supposedly talented team but turn around the next week and lose to a team they were predicted to beat by several touchdowns. They have the talent, but Dykes' squad lacks the consistency it takes to be a great team.

But we can't lose the faith just yet. There are those Tech fans who think the Raiders don't have a chance to win the Big 12 or even the South division, and there are those who would gladly help Dykes pack his bags and drive the U-Haul out of town.

And maybe these points of view are justifiable.

But nonetheless, the Red Raiders are our team. We're stuck with them and Dykes for the duration — or at least until this season is over.

These guys represent us and our school, and we must continue to show support in victory and defeat.

The football team and its fans are like two people in a troubled relationship. They both need something from each other.

The Raiders need fan support, and the fans want a winning season — it's near impossible to have one without the other.

But at the same time, neither can expect the other party to make a complete turnaround overnight. Both must have patience and tolerance.

Tech fans can't expect the Raiders to win every game, and the Raiders can't expect their fans not to show disappointment or even disgust when they lose, especially to teams like North Texas and Missouri.

As for a prediction for the Iowa State game this week, your guess is as good as mine.

Amy Curry is a freshman journalism major from Andrews. She can be reached at treedraider99@yahoo.com.

PAYTON, from p. 6

really have to sacrifice to become successful," said Solis, who ran for more than 5,000 yards as a running back for Slaton High School. "I never did know him, but when you saw him on television, you felt like you knew him just because of the type of person he was."

Tailback James Easterling didn't know Payton personally either, but said his high school coaches called him "sweetness" because he used to run like the hall of famer.

However, more importantly, Easterling said he looked up to Payton and what he did off the gridiron.

"He was a good man who believed in his faith and carried out his faith to serve the community," said Easterling, who has 230 yards rushing and two touchdowns for the Red Raiders this season.

"He was the overall athlete that you would want your kids to look up to as a role model."

Easterling has a videotape titled "The Greatest Running Backs" and said when he watches it, he spends most of the time re-winding Payton's highlights.

The moves he makes and just how hard he runs is what stands out in his mind, Easterling said.

Even though the nickname "Sweetness" has left Easterling, Payton continues to be an inspiration in his life despite his recent death.

"I believe he motivates a lot of good athletes besides me," Easterling said. "It lets people know that you never know when death is on your path, so you have to live life to its fullest."

VOLLEYBALL, from p. 6

all right," Nelson said. "But we're going to certainly keep an eye on her and try and keep the amount of swings she takes down."

Tech's first loss this season to the Aggies turned out to be the third loss in a five-match losing streak. The Aggies had a .327 hitting percentage in the match and held Tech to a .153 hitting mark.

Nelson said he hopes to see more intensity and aggressiveness from his team this time around against A&M.

"This time, I think we need to play with a little more fire," Nelson said. "We need to improve our intensity and focus this time. The first time we played them, we just didn't play with a lot. I think we are a better team now, and we have the ability to show them more."

The match against A&M will be at the G. Rollie White Coliseum, a facility with the capacity to hold 7,800 fans. Jones said the A&M fans make the coliseum a tough environment to play in.

"The worst part about playing at A&M is the fans," Jones said. "They can be really annoying and really loud. But you just have to learn to tune them out and stay focused on what you're there to do."

I think if we do that, it will all go good."

Fall softball teams win titles

The fall softball season came to a close Thursday evening as the following teams won All-University Championships. More Than Trouble won mens, WSO, claimed the women's title and Bust 'N Balls defeated Richard Cranium in the co-rec title.

Players won their first Campus Community title while the Drillers and the Gunslingers won the Raider men's and women's championships respectively.

The mens final saw a high scoring affair with both teams hitting their allotted quota of Home Runs. In the end though, more Than Trouble had more fire power and went on to defeat Trouble 22-15. Victor Gomez, Michael Alvarez and Kevin Knott each scored three runs for the winners.

Bust 'N Balls scored all their runs in the second and third innings and then held on for a 5-4 victory over Richard Cranium. Defense was the name of this game as the only two players reached base in the last two innings.

WSO scored five runs in the first inning on its way to a 7-1 victory over Wonder Women. This marked the first All-University Championship in any sport for WSO.

All-U Football Champions Crowned

Domination was the theme as the All-University Championship games were decided Thursday night on the Rec Fields. One-Way shut out Zeta 12-0 to claim the mens championship while Phi Delt "A" did the same to the Gotti Boys for a 23-0 win. In the co-rec game, the Texans defeated 2207 Main Street Swingers 32-9.

In the women's championship game, One Way used a smothering defense and a touchdown in each half to defeat Zeta. They completed an undefeated season with their championship.

Perennial champion The Texans defended its co-rec title with a dominating 32-9 victory. Quarterback Wade McDowell hit receivers Melinda Ring and Amy Metz for both short and long gains to help decide the outcome.

Phi Delta Theta exploded for 23 second half points to run away from the Gotti Boys in winning the mens championship. What began as a defensive struggle ended when the quickness of the Phi Delt defense and offense created scoring opportunities and a win for Phi Delt.

In the Raider Championship, the Short Bus Riders defeated the Cougars 26-14 to win their first title.

Cholesterol and Glucose screenings

Being responsible for your health includes eating right, exercising and knowing vital information about yourself. You can take another step in this process by getting your cholesterol and glucose checked Thursday, November 11 from 6:40 a.m. to 8:30 a.m. Blood will be drawn by the UMC Med Techs in the Fitness/Wellness Center on that morning. Results include total cholesterol, HDL, LDL, and triglyceride levels as well as blood glucose level. This is open to all students, faculty, staff and their spouses — Rec Center membership is not required. The screening cost $10 for the cholesterol and $3 for the call glucose screening. To register, call 742-3828 by Wednesday, November 10. Take control of your health!

Fitness Events

Nike Nutri-Grain Training and Fitness Program

Workout and get free Nike apparel, water bottles and towels. All you have to do is sign up in the Fitness/Wellness Center for this free Rewards Program and start working out or continue with your current exercise program. The program continues through December 15. Along with Nike, Kelloggs also sponsors the program and has provided samples of twist and fruit filled nutri-grain bars.

Needed: Fitness Instructors

Group exercise fitness and aerobic instructors are needed for the spring semester. If you are interested in teaching at the Rec, apply now. Each applicant then will need to schedule a time to meet on one of the following dates: Sunday, November 14 from 2 p.m. to 3:30 p.m., Monday, November 15 from 2 p.m. to 3:30 p.m., Tuesday, November 16 from 2 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. and Wednesday, November 17 from 2 p.m. to 4 p.m. Each applicant should be able to teach a safe and effective fitness class to students and should be knowledgeable in basic exercise principles. Apply in the Rec Center. For more info call 742-3351.

2 on 2 Co-Rec Basketball Tourney Friday evening

Count it as a warm-up for intramurals or just to have fun but Thursday is the deadline for the 2 on 2 Co-Rec Basketball Tourney which will be held Friday evening at the Rec. Entries are available in the Fitness/Wellness Center or room 202 and the tournament is free. A team consists of one male and one female. Men's baskets are worth one point and women's baskets are worth two points. Everyone is allowed in the lane. Games are first team to 15 or 15 minutes.
