COBA to honor multi-million dollar donor

RENAMING: Tech, business college plan ceremony for Rawls.

By Justin Matthews/Staff Reporter

Record-breaking Texas Tech contributor Jerry Rawls will visit Lubbock tomorrow as Tech and the Jerry S. Rawls College of Business Administration team up to honor the alumnus. A ceremony will be held Saturday at 10:30 a.m. to honor Rawls' $25 million donation to the business college and an $8 million donation for the construction of what will be the Jerry S. Rawls Red Raider Golf Course.

Allen McInnes, dean of the business college, said the ceremony, which will be held at the rotunda in the business college, is put together to be an entertaining time for both Rawls and students.

"We'll have an entertaining time before the game," McInnes said. "Jerry is going to have a great weekend here, as well he should."

The Red Raider band will be at the event, where there will be an unveiling of a wall displaying Rawls' name and a sculpture that is going to go into the rotunda recognizing Rawls.

Rawls earned a bachelor's degree in mechanical engineering from Tech in 1967. He played basketball for the Red Raiders his freshman year and was a member of the Student Senate, Phi Gamma Delta fraternity and the Saddle Tramps. He now resides in Sunnyvale, Calif., where he is the President and CEO of Finisar Corporation, a company specializing in fiber optic subsystems and network performance test systems.

While in Lubbock, Rawls will be overseeing construction at the golf course Friday morning, attending a private dinner with family and friends Friday night, a brunch with university representatives and guests on Saturday morning, the recognition ceremony at 10:30 and a presentation at half time during the Red Raider vs. Iowa State basketball game.

"After the ceremony everyone will be going over to the basketball game," McInnes said. "Jerry will be recognized as well as his freshman basketball team, which includes president Schmidly."

Tom Doak, the designer chosen for the Tech course will also be coming to Lubbock on Friday; he and Rawls will meet up to discuss the course.

"After I graduated from Tech I went to graduate school at Purdue University," Rawls explained. "They have two golf courses on their campus; they were a terrific asset to the university. It occurred to me that we never knew what we were missing at Tech. Tech needed its own golf course."

Tech and the business college encourage all students to attend the ceremony.

"We want as many students to come out as possible," McInnes said. "Jerry deserves this, and I think this is going to be an exciting time for all, so get out and support Jerry."

A Month to Remember

Texas Tech begins Black History Month celebration this weekend

By April Tamplen and Damion Davis
Staff Reporters

The month of February is nationally known as Black History Month, and Texas Tech is joining in the celebration at 5:30 p.m. tonight at the Texas Tech Museum Helen DeVitt Jones Sculpture Court and Auditorium.

Marie Alford, assistant director of admissions processing, is coordinating the activities.

"This is the first event of an exciting series of events," she said. "It is an opportunity for students and faculty at Tech and people of the Lubbock community to get together and celebrate in a comfortable environment."

Special performances by "2000 Black" Jazz Ensemble, Iles Elementary Steel Drum Band and Dunbar JHS Jazz band will be the entertainment for the evening.

Mamadi Nyasuma, leader of the "2000 Black" Jazz ensemble said the group performs jazz, flavor R&B and African music. "We want to show the different connections between all the different kinds of music," he said. "We show how the types of music went different ways in historical development."

Other events throughout the night will include tours of the African Art Exhibit, and speakers Tech President David Schmidly, Mayor Windy Sitton and Lubbock City Councilman T.J. Patterson.

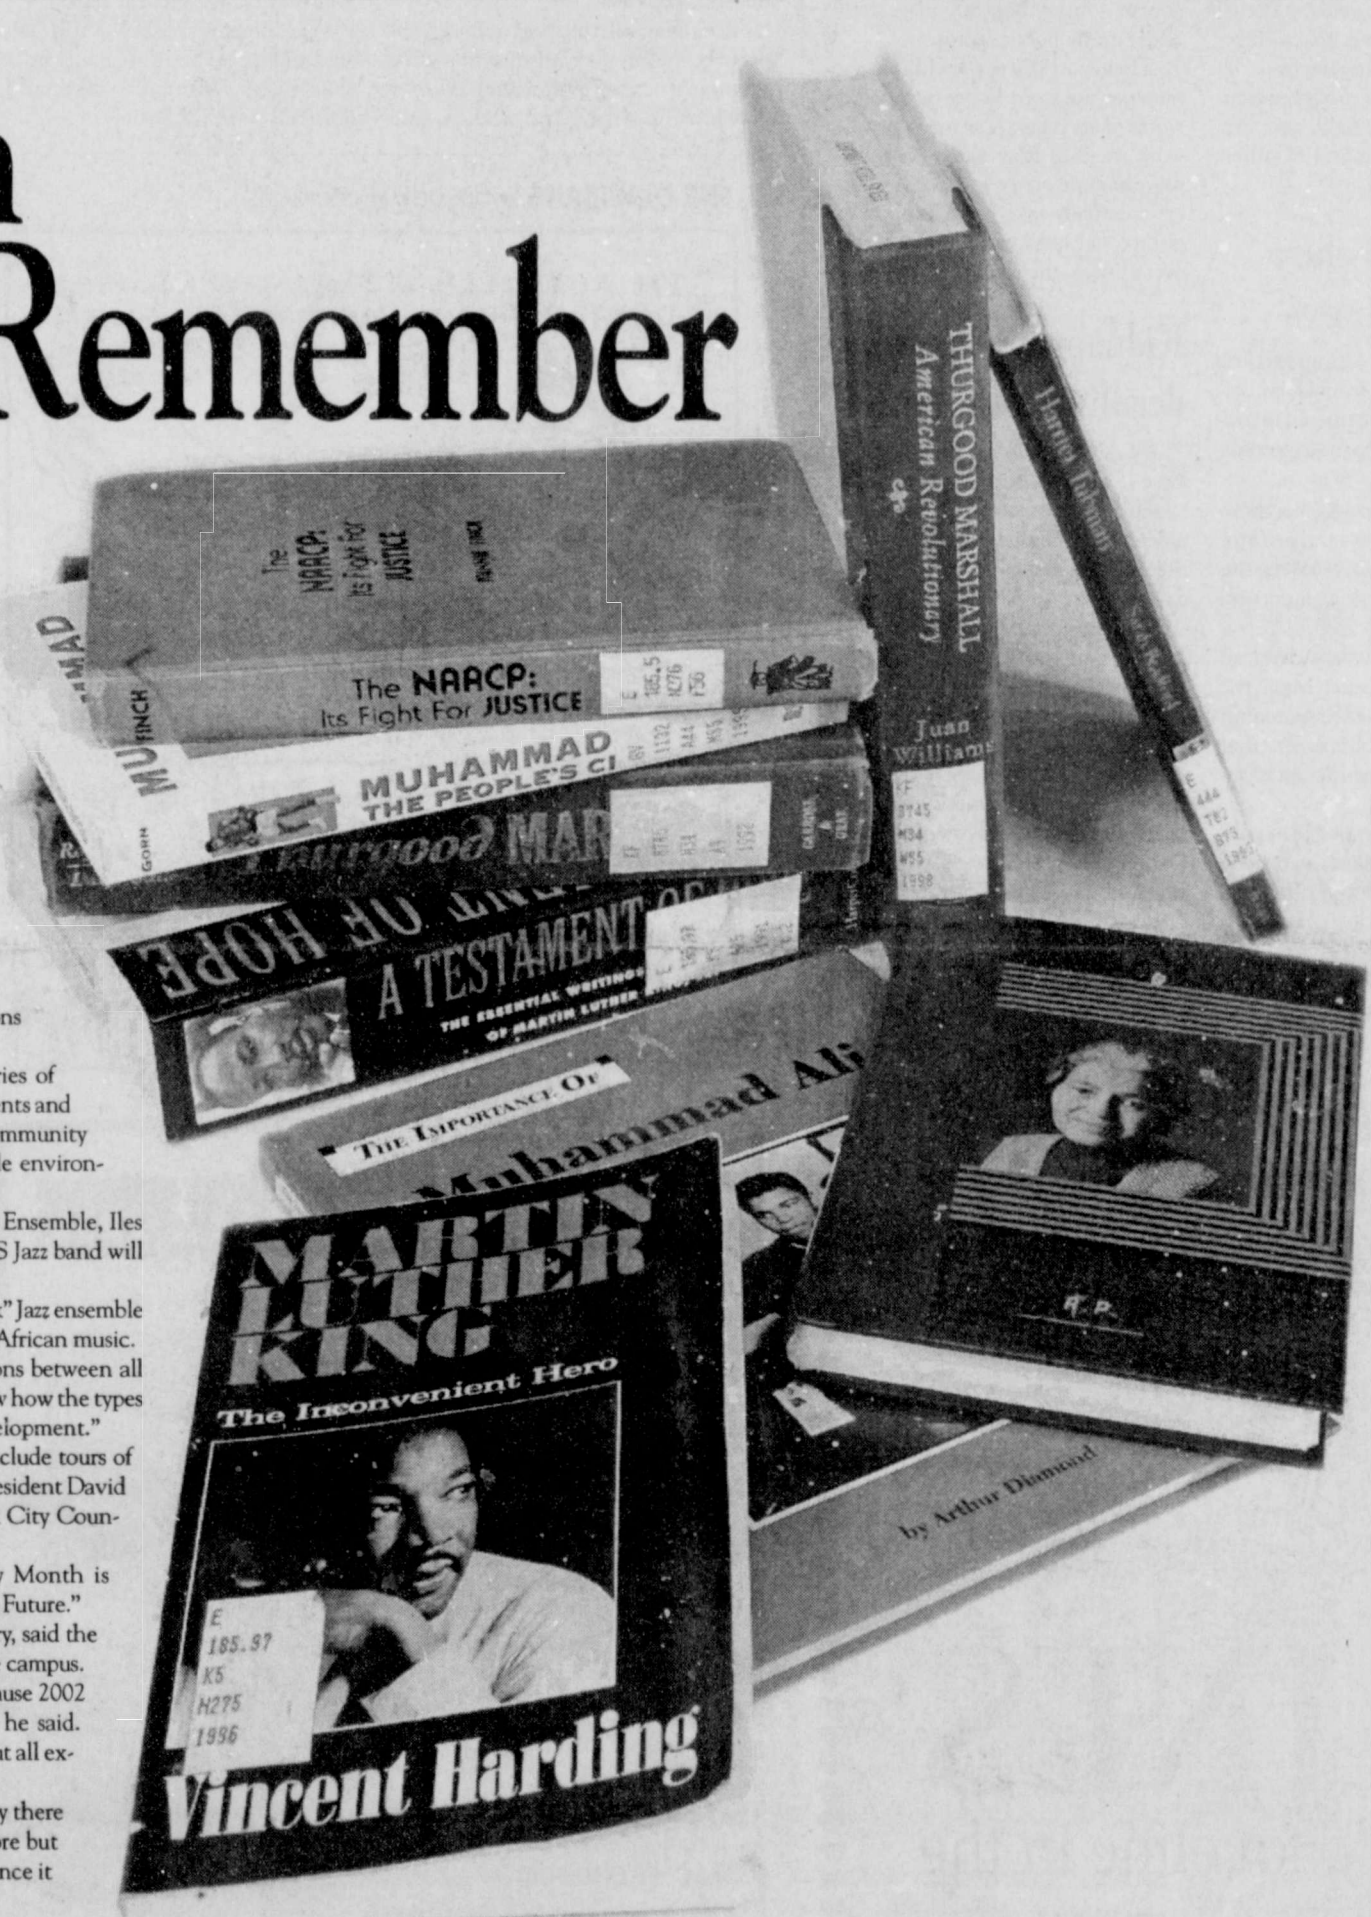

The theme for this year's Black History Month is "Sankofa: Reclaiming Our Past, Building Our Future."

Kwame Alford, assistant professor of history, said the plan is to make Tech a more culturally diverse campus.

"The celebration is historical this year because 2002 is the first annual celebration for Lubbock," he said. "We want to show respect, awareness and about all exposure."

Alford said he was unsure of the reason why there had not been a Black History celebration before but was glad Tech would get the chance to experience it this year.

Tech HSC utilizes technology to help patients statewide

PLUGGED IN: Lubbock, El Paso campuses team up for burn victims.

By Natalie Worthen/Staff Reporter

The Texas Tech Health Sciences has implemented a new telemedicine initiative, connecting the El Paso and Lubbock campuses via television and fiber-optic phone lines.

Administrators say this new burn-treatment system is setting Tech apart from other medical centers.

Dr. John Griswold, chair of the Department of Surgery at the HSC, said he is proud to be part of the telemedicine breakthrough.

"Texas Tech is a pioneer for telemedicine," Griswold said. "We began this procedure of corresponding with patients in 1991. We now have participated in 10,000 medical consultations."

Griswold said Tech is the third largest burn center in the nation and is the only burn center between Dallas and Phoenix, and Oklahoma City and Mexico.

Griswold said many burn patients travel more than 150 miles for treatment that can last up to two years to complete their recovery. This could result in up to 30 trips for treatment.

With the new technology, physicians in El Paso can consult with physicians in Lubbock via television and telephone about patients. Doctors in Lubbock can also use the technology to see patients in El Paso.

Dr. Patti Patterson, vice president of rural community health at HSC, said telemedicine is beneficial financially.

"Telemedicine is convenient because it takes care of travel costs, time away from work and unreliable transportation," Patterson said. "The big difference is time."

National security topic of upcoming on-campus lecture

By Preston Files/Staff Reporter

The political science department at Texas Tech University will host a presentation by Ronnie Lipschutz on global security at 7 p.m. Feb. 7 at the International Cultural Center.

Ronnie Lipschutz, director of the politics graduate program at Stevenson College, University of California-Santa Cruz, will lecture on the state of global security since Sept. 11.

The lecture would benefit students who attend by offering a better understanding of the events of Sept. 11 and what responses would be most appropriate to the attacks, John Barkdull, associate professor of political science, said.

"Anyone — students, faculty and general public would benefit from hearing from an expert on national security," he said. "It is going to be a really interesting event."

Lipschutz said his lecture will compare the attacks on New York and Washington with some of the nation's past tragedies, and examine the appropriateness of the "war metaphor" and associated military responses in dealing with and eliminating the threats posed by terrorist networks.

"I think there is something important about speaking at a campus," he said. "In this case, offering a perspective of which I feel is different than students will ordinarily get."

Barkdull said that Lipschutz's wide-ranging intellectual interest base and cutting-edge research on the issues were primary reason for his being selected to speak.

"He will bring a lot to our campus, such as stimulating new perspectives and more awareness of the nation's situa-

Fort Worth DA to investigate Dallas mayoral election dispute

By Susan Parrott/Associated Press

DALLAS — Whoever wins the race for mayor Dallas could take office under an ethical cloud.

The district attorney in neighboring Fort Worth has been called in to investigate allegations the two candidates offered to buy the endorsement of a third, defeated contender by paying off his campaign debt.

Laura Miller and Tom Dunning will meet in a runoff Feb. 16 for the right to succeed Democratic Mayor Ron Kirk, whose legacy in the nation's ninth-largest city includes big projects like a $420 million sports arena and the redevelopment of blighted south Dallas.

The two candidates — both Democrats — had been promoting a more back-to-basics approach that emphasized street repairs, parks and crime-fighting. But that was before the money-for-endorsement accusations overshadowed the campaign.

In the five-way mayoral election Jan. 19, Miller, a muckraking former newspaper columnist and City Council gadfly, led with 49 percent, while Dunning, an insurance executive, got 38 percent. State Rep. Domingo Garcia was third with about 11 percent.

Because no one got the 50 percent required to win the mayor's office outright, the top two vote-getters advanced to a runoff.

The money-for-endorsement controversy erupted about a week ago after a Garcia supporter told a Spanish-language radio station that before Garcia would endorse Dunning, white business leaders would have to make a commitment to help retire Garcia's campaign debt.

Garcia later endorsed Dunning; both men

The Rundown

Details sketchy about missing A&M student

MIDLAND (AP) — Officials and relatives had few details Thursday on the circumstances of a Texas A&M University student who vanished for four days before turning up unharmed in East Texas.

Sunday's disappearance of Catherine Page Price, an 18-year-old freshman, prompted a massive search for her on roads between College Station and Midland, about 350 miles apart.

Along with hundreds of volunteers, authorities including the Department of Public Safety were involved. The DPS dispatched a helicopter to look for Price's blue Ford Explorer. Price was found Wednesday afternoon when she called her parents from a telephone in Livingston, about 85 miles east of College Station.

NY heir pleads not guilty in murder case

GALVESTON (AP) — The heir of a wealthy Manhattan real estate family pleaded innocent Thursday to slicing apart his neighbor and dumping the bagged remains in the waters off the island city of Galveston.

Robert Durst, 58, told State District Judge Susan Criss he was innocent of murder and bail-jumping, Durst, who skipped an October arraignment on the murder charge, was caught in Pennsylvania Nov. 30.

He was extradited Sunday to Galveston, 50 miles southeast of Houston. His appearance was his first time in a Texas courtroom and came on the day marking the 20th anniversary of his wife's disappearance in New York state.

U.S. attorney rejects plea for investigation

DENVER (AP) — U.S. Attorney John Suthers on Thursday rejected a request from the families of slain Columbine victims to convene a grand jury to investigate claims that a student was killed by police.

"There is not a scintilla of evidence to suggest that any such action was willful or intentional, which is the standard for a federal criminal prosecution," Suthers said in a written statement.

The parents of slain student Daniel Rohrbough claim a Denver police officer killed the 15-year-old as he ran from the school on April 20, 1999. Police say student gunmen Dylan Klebold and Eric Harris killed Rohrbough and 12 others before killing themselves.

Scientists say they can make kidneys

BOSTON (AP) — Using building material from cloned cow embryos, scientists say they have constructed miniature kidneys that appear to function similar to genuine organs.

While it is still unclear whether these made-from-scratch kidneys can perform all the duties of the ordinary variety, the researchers said they work well enough to produce urine.

The research was done by Advanced Cell Technology in Worcester, Mass., the same company that caused an uproar in November with the announcement that it had taken steps toward human cloning.

The latest research has not been published in a scientific journal, so experts said they found it difficult to assess the importance of the company's claim.

Report says Louvre facing problems

PARIS (AP) — The artworks may be beautiful, but what happens behind the scenes at the Louvre Museum is something of a mess, according to a report issued Thursday by France's state auditors.

Waste and mismanagement are disrupting the show for some of the millions of visitors to the famed museum in Paris, the report by the Cour des Comptes suggests. The report was part of a more than 800-page study of the entire public sector.

The report said the world's biggest museum does not know how many works of art it has, how many people work there or how much time employees spend on the job. Some workers habitually take extra days off or go on coffee breaks that last for hours, according to the report.

Kidnappers extend deadline for reporter

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — An e-mail sent Thursday purportedly by the kidnapers of Wall Street Journal reporter Daniel Pearl extended the deadline for killing him by one day.

The unsigned e-mail was received by Pakistani and Western media. In Washington, Secretary of State Colin Powell ruled out meeting the kidnapers' demands.

"We will give you one more day," the e-mail said. "If America will not meet our demands we will kill Daniel. Then this cycle will continue and no American journalist could enter Pakistan."

Trial for prison escapee moved to East Texas

DALLAS (AP) — The capital murder trial for one of the six prison escapees to be tried in the killing of an Irving police officer will be moved from Dallas County to East Texas, a judge ruled Thursday.

State District Judge Vic Cunningham says jury selection in the trial of Michael Rodriguez will begin March 1 in Mount Vernon, in Franklin County, about 95 miles east of Dallas.

Rodriguez will be the third of the escapees to be tried in the Christmas Eve, 2000 slaying of Irving policeman Aubrey Hawkins. George Rivas and Donald Newbury both received the death penalty for his murder.

Attorneys for Rodriguez sought the change of venue, citing publicity about the trials and convictions of two previous escapees, as well as their statements to police.

Hawkins was killed while trying to stop a robbery by the inmates, who escaped from the Connally Unit in South Texas on Dec. 13, 2000.

The inmates stole $70,000 in cash and a large cache of weapons from the Irving Oshman's store, and Hawkins was shot 11 times.

Road Closing

From 1:30 to 5 p.m. today, 8th Street between University Avenue and Akron Avenue, will be closed to allow installation of a light pole on the football practice fields north of 8th Street. Please use alternate routes of travel through campus during that period.

Senate committee says Enron not cooperating

WASHINGTON (AP) — Enron Corp. has failed to provide a Senate committee with important information about a web of partnerships used to conceal massive debts, a senator leading an investigation said Thursday.

Enron officials "just simply have not cooperated" in providing the documents sought, said Byron Dorgan, D-N.D., chairman of a Senate Commerce subcommittee. "We again renew our request."

An estimated 3,000 partnerships, some with names of "Star Wars" characters such as Jedi, were created by Enron — which took a 97 percent stake in each of them and brought in outside investors for the remainder. The partnerships were kept off Enron's books and helped create the accounting debacle that pushed the company into the biggest U.S. corporate bankruptcy ever on Dec. 2.

Dorgan said the committee did not immediately plan to issue a subpoena to the company.

Attorneys representing Enron did not immediately return a telephone call seeking comment.

Kenneth Lay, Enron's chairman until his resignation last week and a supporter of President Bush, has agreed to testify at the committee's hearing Monday, Dorgan told reporters. He said Lay's attorneys have not asked for immunity from prosecution as a condition.

On-campus clinic available to community

By Meredith Salmon/Staff Reporter

When students are overloaded with pressures from school, relationship issues or work, they can find relief at the family therapy clinic.

The on-campus service is a training facility for the marriage and family therapy doctoral program and is credited by the American Association for Marriage and Family Therapy.

Counselors are equipped to help individuals, groups and couples.

Director Kary Reid said the clinic is intended to be a place for therapists to train and as a community service; it does not just serve the university's population.

All of the counselors are graduate students.

Reid said the clinic can help people with a wide range of issues, including relationship issues, depression, manic-depression, anxiety and eating disorders.

"People in recovery are able to get help to get back in the stream of things," Reid said.

Carmen Aguirre-Soliz, a first year Ph.D. student in marriage and family studies from Lubbock, said students utilize the service to deal with sources of stress and concerns.

"My own case load has several Tech students that utilize the clinic with stress related to classes, having to work and living away from home," Aguirre-Soliz said. "There are several that come in with relationship problems, or they're having difficulty trying to establish independence away from Mom and Dad."

The clinic offers a sliding scale fee, which means that the fee varies between $10 and $50, depending on the client's gross income and the number of dependents per family. The amount is flexible and negotiable, Aguirre-Soliz said.

"Occasionally, the clinic director will allow us to see special cases for less than the $10," Aguirre-Soliz said. "I'm a student myself and can understand how the financial crunch can be."

To guarantee the patient is satisfied with the services, the first appointment is free.

During the first session, the therapist talks with the client to see how he or she feels about using that particular therapist. Patients are welcome to see another counselor in the clinic if they wish. Clients will receive a follow-up call after the first session to ensure they are satisfied with their therapist.

"It's important that there is a good fit between the client and therapist," Aguirre-Soliz said.

The clinic is open from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m. during the week.

"We're really flexible with therapists' and clients' schedules, so clients can usually find a time to come in," Aguirre-Soliz said.

There is a diverse range of gender, race and ethnicity on staff. Students from Japan, Korea, East India and Mexico are on staff. Counseling is offered in English and Spanish.

"We feel like we can accommodate and help anyone to feel at home and comfortable at the clinic," Aguirre-Soliz said.

The clinic is available to help anyone in Lubbock. Referrals come from several sources, such as the women's protective services, the children's protective services, children on probation and the probation department, Aguirre-Soliz said.

The faculty has years of experience, Aguirre-Soliz said.

Every counselor has a mentor and faculty member to consult with concerning every case.

"We have tremendous facilities for the work that we're trying to do," Reid said.

HSC

Griswold said the telemedicine procedure is fairly simple, and the Lubbock clinic receives excellent help from El Paso, keeping up to date with clients' needs and concerns.

"The initial visit can sometimes be over the phone or television, due in part to the severity of the injury," Griswold said. "It is possible to do the entire treatment with telemedicine."

Patterson said some of the most success of telemedicine is with children and prison patients.

"The children are comfortable with the technology," Patterson said.

Telecommunications Infrastructure Fund Board created House Build 2128, TIF in 1996. TIF provides telemedicine to HSC.

Gwen Stafford, vice president of the University Medical Center, is vice chairman for TIF.

"Congrats to Tech for using the money so productively and efficiently," Stafford said.

Stafford said she was grateful to the legislature for creating the fund.

"This project fulfills the purpose of getting Texas connected and opening healthcare communications by every means," Stafford said.

Commemoration

"This is a new day with new visions that could lead to a new American existence," he said. "Together we should all know that diversity is important to strengthen the nation."

Friday's celebration continues at 11 a.m. Saturday when Asa G. Hilliard gives a keynote speech at Dunbar Junior High located at 2010 E. 26th St. His speech will be about diversity of education. There will also be a luncheon held after the speech.

Hilliard is the professor of Urban Education at Georgia State University in Atlanta.

Hilliard was unavailable for comment at press time.

Alford said this month means a lot to the black community at Tech.

"Diversity will strengthen the American society," he said. "People have a fear of what is different, and instead of fearing it, they should embrace it with open arms."

The idea of celebrating Black History Month was first introduced by Carter Woodson in 1926. It was then called Negro History Week and later was adapted to become Black History Month.

"There is a melting pot of diversity in America," Alford said. "History is like a mother to a child, when you leave the womb you cannot leave her behind."

denied that they had cut any deal.

Garcia then countered that Miller and her husband, state Rep. Steve Wolens, had offered to pay off Garcia's debt in return for his endorsement. They denied it, with Miller declaring: "I would never, ever offer anything to Domingo Garcia. I wouldn't even buy him lunch."

Tarrant County District Attorney Tim Curry opened an investigation, saying he was asked by the Dallas district attorney to take the case after the D.A. withdrew to avoid any conflict of interest.

Dunning, 59, and Miller, 43, said they welcome the investigation and will open their personal and campaign records.

tion," he said.

Lipschultz said instead of talking about threats on terrorism, he plans to talk broadly about what constitutes security under contemporary positions of globalization and the implications for that for U.S. foreign policy.

"I think that it is important to understand the limitations and what we should do about the military force," he said. "The problem with terrorism is not handled through the application of military force, so the implication is that it is likely to be a long struggle with not just inconclusive but an unsuccessful outcome."

Barkdull said security issues are more complex than many realize.

"It's not just about bombs and rockets," Barkdull said. "Security has a lot more to do with than having the biggest weapons."

Lipschultz said being invited to a college campus and unaware of what the political atmosphere is like at Tech, he does not know what the students' usual source of information is.

"I plan to offer more of a critical stance on the whole idea that this is a war," he said.

"I think there has been a lot of uncritical material that has come out about this war on terrorism not just from the administrative but also from the media that basically accepts what the bush administration has been saying," Lipschultz said.

"As a result of the lecture I would like to see people be more thoughtful and a little less inclined to go for the easy answer such as let's go out and bomb them," Barkdull said.

People need to recognize the complexity of the situation and be more reflexive on the events of Sept. 11, he said.

Bad behavior not to be blamed on alcohol

RACHEL RICHMOND

I have visited Lubbock's finest drinking establishments since I became 21. I enjoy the taste of beer, the neon lights and of course the people. I am an avid people watcher — what can I say?

People are fascinating, especially in an environment based on alcohol. That one person who seems cool as ice entering the bar can transform into the most ridiculous person in the place after an hour of heavy drinking. Beer goggles come on, spillage occurs and those shoes are now the worst idea they have ever had. So, why do we drinkers choose to humiliate ourselves? Do we think it is fun, or do we not care — or is it a dangerous mixture of the two?

Of course, alcohol allows the guard to come down, the inhibitions to be released and is a green flag for the embarrassment to begin. The best part is, alcohol can be used as the excuse for bad behavior the day after.

But when do we draw the line and just admit we were irresponsible and perfectly capable of conduct better than we displayed?

During my expedition of bar life this weekend, I noticed a few things that should be published on a list of bar no-nos. The first to address is stealing. Whether it is a spot in the bathroom line or a just-bought drink, stealing is on the list of bad bar behavior.

I witnessed such an act against a good friend of mine this weekend. She bought her beer, set it on the bar to rummage through her purse and the guy sitting next to her snatched her drink. She confronted the culprit and with no apology or money offered from him, she sullenly replaced her drink. This type of behavior will cause you to lose friends.

Another topping the list is purpose spillage. This is one of the most annoying acts displayed. I don't understand the humor in slamming a new beer down on the table so that the cold beverage spews into the air spraying everyone in its path. This is not funny. I encountered a girl in the bathroom with hair and clothes soaking wet in ice-cold beer. She was not happy. I got her a paper towel and wished her the best.

Bad behavior number three has got to be embarrassing one's friends on purpose. Sure, you may have had a bit too much to drink, but this is no excuse for acting like a jackass. Friends are supposed to help each other out, not point out their faults — especially in front of a crowd.

If they have toilet paper stuck to their shoe, tell them. If certain body parts are hanging out that are not supposed to, take them to the side and quietly let them know. Do not announce it to the entire bar.

Saving seats is a chart-topper as well. If you have been saving the same stool or chair for over an hour, you need to give it up. Face it, the person you are saving the seat for is not coming. There are plenty of people in the bar that would like to rest their legs and sit down. A huge no-no in this category is when you are just using an empty seat to prop your leg up. This is rude and selfish behavior. Give the seat up and help a fellow drinker out.

Yet another form of bad bar behavior is bathroom behavior. One hint to all — hurry up! I know everything becomes slow motion while drunk, but pretend you are in a race. The person in line behind you has to go just as bad as you.

People are fascinating, especially in an environment based on alcohol. That one person who seems cool as ice entering the bar can transform into the most ridiculous person in the place after an hour of heavy drinking.

Also, always wash your hands. The non hand-washers know who they are and it is disgusting. Being drunk is no excuse for being dirty. The soap on the counter is not a decoration — it is there to sanitize. Take a hint.

Mirror hogs are also not a crowd pleaser. If you must fix your face, bring a compact and allow the hand-washers the sink area.

Last but not least are the ones that have had way too much to drink. If you are throwing up, it is time to go home. It does not mean you have made more room in your stomach for another round. You are taking up a bathroom stall. We all know how precious those are, and you are not fun to baby-sit. This is a huge clue to the friends of the puker — take your drunk friend home! Don't let them wallow in their own misery on the bathroom floor. Times like those are exactly what friends are for.

If you are not a bar fly, then I do encourage trying it out, at least once for the experience. Sure, it could be either the worst or best night of your life, but the crowd is definitely a perk. Are you a product of bad bar behavior — or are you an on-looker? Either way, the experience can be an eye-opener.

Cheers!

No guarantees when it comes to tomorrow

COLUMN

DANIEL WHITE

I guess you could say I really wanted to write about some type of current event, so I picked up a major Houston newspaper and began to flip through it to find some story that would inspire me to write.

Although my original intent was to just find some story to write about, I must admit I never really felt inspired to write about anything until I reached the obituary section of the paper. You see, I now believe perhaps the most important section of the newspaper is the obituary section, for there is no other place inside of a newspaper where the reality of life is more clear than there.

It is not only a view of the beauty of the lives that others lived, but it is also a constant reminder that tomorrow is not promised to any of us. Although most all of us have at one time or another had to bury someone that we truly cared about, I fear that we are so quick to lay the dead to rest and get on with our lives that we never allow the reality of life's end to encourage us to make every day count. Often, we live this life for a dream tomorrow can bring, and we never grasp the certainty each day holds. To open our eyes every morning is nothing short of a blessing. Somehow we have managed to learn how to watch life go by today while living our lives for tomorrow but never realize all we have is today with no promise of life tomorrow.

We live each day according to the dreams tomorrow could bring, instead of living each day as if it were our last. So many times we waste precious time by arguing and fighting with those we truly love and care about, and we never recognize the fact that the very time we waste hurting each other we will never be able to get back. There are children in cancer treatment centers all across this country that fight a daily battle just to see another day of life, and there are mothers living in third-world countries that struggle daily in the midst of poverty-stricken societies to keep their children fed and alive.

While these children fight daily battles to live, our newspaper headlines talk about how our student-elected officials fight daily battles concerning student seating for sporting events. What is really important to us?

Those children know the meaning and value of life because every day they are reminded of what is important in life, but we continue to live each day for the politics of tomorrow. It is OK to read the newspaper and watch the television and be entertained, but the minute we close our eyes to the reality of how short this life really is, that which once entertained us, now blinds us to the truth.

We, as a society, have become so concerned with the materialistic things of this world that provide no eternal value, yet the truth is every one of us came into this world with nothing and will leave this earth the same way. Knowing this is true, what can be more important than living this life for all you can do for others and yourself today?

The cemeteries of America are full of people who had plans for today, but they simply did not live to see this day. None of us really know how young we are because none of us know how much longer we have on this earth. The unmistakable truth is that unlike many of the cancer-infected and impoverished children that I mentioned earlier, we have not learned the true value of life.

What will it take to make you see how blessed you are to be alive? If you are happy to be alive today take the time to thank God for giving you another day, and take it one step further by telling those that you love and care about how much they meant to you simply because you may never get another chance.

Most importantly, live every day that you have to the fullest because tomorrow just is not promised.

Dubya's goals, remarks funny, hard to swallow

COLUMN

DALLAS GRANT

I forced myself to watch President George W. Bush's State of the Union Address Tuesday night. We cut off our cable a while back, and well, Bush was on every channel. So, I sat down with low expectations. Needless to say, I got exactly what I expected.

Now, I'm not a big Bush supporter. In fact I'm not a politico at all. I don't care which party is giving the speech, and typically don't care for the information. Last night was different though. In light of the September attacks I was curious to see how ol'

Dubya would come off.

Bush started with strong words. He built to an almost thundering crescendo that despite our current situation, "the state of our union has never been stronger." The line seemed so rehearsed; I cringed. Apparently, so did most of the audience — either that or they were sleeping. Then I thought Cheney had another heart attack and forgot to light the applause sign in front of the podium. After a few moments the cue took effect. Then the audience applauded, eventually rising in ovation.

"This is going to be a long night," I thought.

Bush spent half of his time scaring the hell out of everyone with boogey-man terrorist stories. I find it extremely amusing that he continues to assure the country that we are safe. Then, when it behooves his new military policy, he whips out the terrorist stories saying the terrorists had diagrams of our nuclear facilities, plans for making chemical weapons and surveillance photos of U.S. cities. But don't worry, we're completely safe, just like with the anthrax!

He pretty much turned the speech into a call to arms. I could almost see him begging, "Please don't end my war yet! I haven't gotten any new toys for the boys in green, and well, it helps to hide this stinking economy."

I can't help but feel his administration plays up this "conflict" in order to draw attention away from pressing issues in our country like education, unemployment and environmental policy. I smell a distinct "Wag the Dog" scent, especially since Bush has gotten his approval ratings up around 80 percent. My guess is that his ratings will steadily decline until the day he runs out of office, with his deficit spending chasing closely behind.

Even funnier than Bush's attempts to pronounce the names of foreign leaders, Tuesday night was his straight-shooting Texan machismo, which attempted to hide his ignorance. It didn't exactly work. Frankly, the rounds of pity applause he received embarrassed me. There were obvious points in his speech that called for boisterous applause, and multiple times he stood waiting for what seemed like eternity with a confused look on his face.

Honored fire fighters and police officers listened from the gallery as Bush vaguely outlined a plan to attack our attackers in response to the Sept. 11 tragedy. As horrific as Sept. 11 was, it may serve as a scapegoat for the Bush administration. After all, I can remember economic analysts predicting a Bush deficit long before our terrorist attack. Of course, now no one will question the reason for our poor economy out of respect for the fallen. To call Sept. 11 an excuse for poor economic policy might tarnish the deaths of the heroes that died. Obviously, I don't believe that.

Sept. 11 was a terrible incident, but Bush and his cronies were planning on screwing things up anyway. So, the new strategy engineered by the Bush administration is to install excessive fear into Americans, knowing full well that they won't object to increased defense spending. Who would be against defending the country? The truth is, not all the money in the world will stop terrorists from taking lives with their own. A missile defense shield wouldn't have stopped the airplanes, and neither will new tanks, boats or submarines.

Bush closed his speech with cries of freedom, pitting the U.S. against all the evil in the universe. Who can argue with that? A trained monkey could jump up on stage with a sign that read freedom and get a standing ovation these days. Whose freedom are we talking about? I didn't know we were in danger of losing ours.

I have to admit it's a hell of a battle cry, one that summons 80 percent of the nation. Here's the real deal — we're not in danger of losing our freedom; the people of Afghanistan are not Americans and likely don't give a damn about us. We still haven't captured the man who planned the terrorist attacks. Oh, but that wasn't ever really our goal, right? There are so many other threats.

Now we can fan out across the world and hunt elusive and possibly non-existent boogey men while blaming our recession on a man we can't find.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Gilbreth hypocritical

To the editor: First of all, my own personal feelings in regards to atheism are irrelevant, but the way in which Kristen Gilbreth portrayed the Christians of the Texas Tech campus and their beliefs is what deeply offends me ("Equality not defined by conformity," UD 01-30).

Speaking as a Christian, I passionately feel that there are very few fellow Christians who would like to take part in watching all atheists "burn at the stake," as it was so bluntly stated. Please explain to me how you can feel so passionate about the misconceptions of atheists as "pagan devil worshippers," but yet you feel inclined to give an extremely inaccurate depiction of Christians as hateful, evangelistic hypocrites who find enjoyment in the suffering of others.

It is obvious that you took the responsibility as a writer to brush up on the basic premises of atheism before writing this article, so perhaps you should have done the same, and investigated the beliefs of Christianity as well.

Afghan warloads battle for strategic town; 43 dead, dozens injured

GADEZ, Afghanistan (AP) — Terrified families huddled in basements or fled on foot Thursday as rival Afghan warlords waged artillery battles for control of this strategic town, killing at least 43 people and injuring dozens of others.

The fierce fighting gave new urgency to Afghan leader Hamid Karzai's appeal for an expanded international security force to be deployed outside the capital, Kabul, to stave off such factional battles. Loud explosions, the dull thud of mortars and the rattle of heavy machine-gun fire echoed through deserted streets as troops of the province's would-be governor, dug in atop a pair of hilltops south of the city, took aim at fighters loyal to the town's tribal council, or shura, holed up in a fortress in the town center. Karzai, who stopped in Britain en route home from a high-profile visit to the United States, met with Prime Minister Tony Blair and said there was overwhelming support among the Afghan people for a widening of the peacekeeping mission. "It's a demand of the Afghan people as a measure of commitment by the international community, as a symbol of their commitment to Afghanistan to stay on," he said. The battle for Gadez could complicate U.S. efforts — including clandestine operations led by small bands of special forces — to root out fugitive Taliban and al-Qaida fighters.

Food bank presents Community Action Day

By Liesl Klinkerman/Staff Reporter

The South Plains Food Bank will gear up for the Community Action Day 9 a.m. Saturday at the food bank.

"Community Action Day is a day when the community can come together and pull together," David Weaver, the executive director at the food bank said.

Brenda Hayes, administrator of the food bank, said Community Action Days are held monthly.

"Once a month, we have a volunteer work day," Hayes said. "It allows people from the community to come and help."

Volunteer students can lend a hand at the food bank by helping box food or to help garden.

"We usually ask the volunteers to help sort and package food," Weaver said. "They can also help garden. We have a market garden, which helps provide families in need with food. Volunteers will usually help for about three hours."

Weaver said Volunteers at the Food Bank are often members of student organizations at Texas Tech.

"Texas Tech is a big part of the food bank," he said. "It's a chance for the students to give back. It's important for students to learn valuable lessons as well as academic ones. It's an experience they will remember."

Hayes said she appreciates the assistance Tech students provide.

"A lot of Tech students help," Hayes said. "We get a lot of work done when we work with Tech organizations and programs. Plus, we have fun."

Hayes said helping others in need is an important lesson that college students should try to obtain.

"Volunteering helps students see a different aspect of the community," Hayes said. "They see outside of their little world, and it prepares them for the real world."

Weaver said families in need should contact an agency before going to the bank, Weaver said.

"They should go through an agency that can provide a voucher," he said.

"Then the families are screened. After that, we can provide help."

Weaver said the food bank offers more than just basic supplies to the needy families.

"These families are at the end of their rope," Weaver said. "We can provide friendship and help direct them. It's a gratifying experience."

Hayes said working at the food bank has provided the opportunity to see things in a new light.

"I've worked here for twelve years," she said. "It's become habit, but it's definitely my calling to help. It really helps put things into perspective."

Weaver said he also feels his career has benefited him.

"I enjoy working here. I come into contact with the best people that Lubbock has to offer, and I see results," Weaver said. "It's pretty there, there are a lot of laughs, a lot of smiles and a lot of tears."

Students or organizations that would like to volunteer can contact the South Plains Food Bank at (806) 763-3003.

People in search of assistance can call the help line at (806) 765-6262.

Tech baseball takes show on the road to New Mexico

JEREMY MOORE/Staff Photographer
 TEXAS TECH OUTFIELDER Julio Guerrero attempts to slide into second base before BYU shortstop Ranger Wiens applies the tag during last weekend's three-game series. Tech has a three-game tilt with New Mexico this weekend in Albuquerque, N.M.

By Jeff Keller/Staff Reporter

For the second consecutive week, the Red Raider baseball team will have to wait an extra day to begin a three-game series.

Texas Tech was scheduled to face the University of New Mexico at 3 p.m. today in Albuquerque, N.M., but the game was postponed because of winter weather in the Albuquerque area.

Tech will now face the Lobos at 1 p.m. Saturday, Sunday and Monday to complete the three-game series.

Last week, the Raiders were forced to play a doubleheader Friday against Brigham Young University after their Thursday contest was postponed because of winter weather.

The Raiders swept the three-game series with the Cougars to get their season off to a 3-0 start.

Tech shortstop Gera Alvarez had two hits in the series with BYU and said the extra day of rest will benefit the Red Raiders.

"It won't bother us," Alvarez said of the postponement of today's game. "It is probably better for us. It will give our pitchers a little rest, and it will give our position players a little rest too."

Tech batted .343 as a team against the Cougars and Raider right-fielder Scooter Jordan batted .556 at the lead-off position in his first series as a Raider.

Tech was forced to come from behind to claim wins in each contest against BYU. Jordan said Tech showed against the Cougars it had what it takes to get the win no matter what the deficit.

"We were able to come from behind against a good ball club," Jordan said. "That is real big when you can come from behind and just take your time and wait for the opportunities to show themselves. When they did, we just took advantage of them."

Alvarez said he was pleased with the comeback victories last week but hopes Tech can take care of business early on and not have to worry about rallying late in games to claim wins against UNM.

"You always try to avoid that,"

Alvarez said of playing from behind. "You always want to stay ahead. We want to get on them early and stay on top. We want to just play some good defense after that and hold the lead."

Tech split the four games it had with UNM last season as the Lobos posted a 26-34 record in 2001.

Tech will have 15 players making their first road trip as Red Raiders this weekend.

Jordan is one of those players and said he is excited to take the Raider baseball show on the road.

"I am really looking forward to playing again," Jordan said. "Going on our first road trip; that is going to be cool. Just to get on the road with some of the guys is going to be fun."

The UNM road trip will be the first of four road trips the Raider baseball squad will make before its next home series, a three-game scrap with Seton Hall beginning Feb. 22.

Kentucky hit with three-year probation

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Kentucky was hit hard by the NCAA on Thursday when it was placed on three years' probation for football recruiting violations in "one of the more serious cases heard by the committee in recent years."

The Wildcats, cited by the NCAA for more than three dozen recruiting violations, were banned from a bowl game next season and must forfeit a total of 19 scholarships over the next three years.

"This is an embarrassment to the university, it's an embarrassment to our fans and it's an embarrassment to the athletic department," Kentucky athletic director Larry Ivy said.

In a 41-page report citing Kentucky as lacking institutional control over its football program, the NCAA said it was "troubled by the widespread nature of the undetected violations in time, frequency and the number of individuals who would have some knowledge that the activities were improper and failed to report them to the proper authorities."

Tech seeks win against Cylones

Texas Tech will try to rebound from Wednesday's loss to Nebraska when the Red Raiders face Iowa State at 12:45 p.m. Saturday in the United Spirit Arena.

No. 20 Tech lost to the Cornhuskers 80-69.

Tech enters the matchup with the Cyclones with a 15-4 overall record and 4-3 Big 12 Conference mark.

The Cyclones sit at the bottom of the Big 12 with a 1-7 conference mark and 9-13 overall record. Their only Big 12 win came against Missouri Jan. 9.

Iowa State enters the contest coming off a 52-50 loss to Texas A&M on Tuesday.

The Cyclones are led in scoring by senior forward Tyray Pearson with 18.9 points per game.

Tech guard Andre Emmett paces Tech with 19.1 points per game.

No Tech players were available for comment.

Lady Raiders look to herd Lady Buffs

By Jeff Keller/Staff Reporter

The Lady Raiders will try to climb two games above the .500 mark in the Big 12 Conference standings for the first time this season when they take on the Colorado Buffaloes at 1 p.m. Sunday at the United Spirit Arena.

All Texas Tech students get free admission into the game.

It will be the first home game for the Lady Raiders in more than a week as Tech looks to collect its second win in a row after knocking off Texas A&M at College Station Wednesday.

Against the Aggies, the Lady Raiders (13-6 overall, 5-4 Big 12) shot 57 percent from the floor and had two players top the 20-point mark in scoring. Guard Jia Perkins poured in 22 points and forward Jolee Ayers contributed 22 points of her own in the 77-55 road win.

Tech held the edge in rebounding against the Aggies, grabbing 38 boards to the Aggies' 31.

Lady Raider forward Casey Jackson snared five rebounds and dished out two assists in the win against the Aggies.

Jackson said it was good to see a translation from practice to the game in the post area.

"Jolee (Ayers) did a real good job inside against A&M," Jackson said. "We've been working on the post a lot in practice, and that is something that we will try to keep using against Colorado."

Following the win against the Aggies, the Lady Raiders' plane experienced difficulties after taking off from College Station and was forced to return to College Station.

The Lady Raiders were forced to travel by bus from College Station to Lubbock, arriving in the Hub City shortly after 8 a.m. Thursday morning.

After defeating the Aggies in front of a crowd of 2,140 at Reed Arena, and the post game travel troubles the Lady Raiders experienced, Tech center Cisti Greenwalt said the Lady Raiders are glad to be playing the Buffaloes at home.

"We are really excited to be back in front of our fans," Greenwalt said. "After playing in front of about a thousand fans and then the trouble we had getting back home after the A&M game, we are excited about playing at home again."

The Buffs are led in scoring by senior guard Mandy Nightingale who is averaging 15 points per game this season.

Greenwalt scored seven points and grabbed eight rebounds in the win against A&M, and said after falling to Kansas State earlier in the week, the Lady Raiders will try and carry the momentum from the Aggie win into their tilt with the Buffs.

"I think the A&M win gives us a lot of confidence," Greenwalt said. "I think it was something we needed, and I think it will help us as we go into the Colorado game."
