Famed Flyer Appointed Manager Aviation Sales

Noted aviator, winner of many world's speed records, and holder of the Distinguished Flying Cross, Captain Al J. Williams has accepted the position of Manager of Aviation Sales with the Gulf Refining Company. He takes over this responsibility to devote his wide flying experience to industrial progress. He will assume his post immediately.

This announcement has particular importance not only because Captain Williams is one of America's foremost exponents of aviation but also because his experience as businessman, writer, lecturer, and lawyer fits him for his duties.

His career has been featured by many outstanding acknowledgments of his prowess as an ace flyer. In addition to winning the Distinguished Flying Cross, Captain Williams was one of the twelve men selected in the United States "in recognition of services rendered to aeronautics" by the American Society of Mechanical Engineers. For eight consecutive years he held the American speed record for airplanes.

Captain Williams enlisted in the Navy for the duration of the war as naval aviator. He specialized in testing airplanes for the Navy Department and developing aerial aerodynamics for purposes of fighting in the air. From 1926 until 1930, when he resigned from the Navy, he specialized in high speed research.

At the time he received the Distinguished Flying Cross, Captain Williams also received a citation from the Secretary of the Navy. This stated in part: that he had many times undergone risk of his life for the benefit of the service—that, up to 1925, he had performed this duty with aid of a parachute where a serious crash was expected—that he flew one plane to complete destruction to elicit information on the vital subject of flat spinning of service aircraft—that his constant association with test and development work had been occasioned by the desire of the chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics to continue him in a position where the Navy could get the most benefit of his experience and ability—that the standard combat type of plane reflects many of the improvements pioneered in racing by him—that from 1922 on he played a major part in keeping the Navy to the fore in heavier-than-air development—that in articles written to the public he had shown himself to be a scholar as well as a master pilot.

Today Captain Williams' busy life supplies him with a diversity of interests and makes him doubly valuable as Manager of Aviation Sales for the Gulf Refining Company. He is one of the officers of the Delaware Chemical Engineering Company, a steady contributor to the Saturday Evening Post, Collier's, Liberty, and aeronautical journals on aviation subjects, a lecturer of note, a lawyer in the State of New York, and a Captain in the U. S. Marine Corps, Reserves. It is also interesting to note that he graduated from Fordham University, received a Bachelor of Laws degree from Georgetown University Evening Law School, and pitched for the New York Giants two years under John J. McGraw.

WEATHER FORECAST

Tarzan, Texas, June 24
To Stanton Reporter:
I advise the people as my view on the weather for the next three months.
I forecast rain June 28, July 1 and 15 and 24; August 25 and 27, Sept. 14. These rains might not cover the country but will be seen somewhere nearby. These could be called local showers. But September rains will be general and continue for several days. If the early rains hit this country it will insure a feed crop. It could be that cotton would make some and its possible to make a good crop now if these rains fall.

EVERY GRADUATE IN A GOOD POSITION

That was the honest record and the motto of the outstanding business college of the United States until the world-wide depression struck us.

With business again gaining momentum and with the optimism our people possess—and with the faith and confidence in our leader in Washington—it seems likely at this time that the Business College graduate in the future will enjoy an even greater prestige and have a better choice of business opportunities than ever before.

There are many good business training schools in America. They survive in competition with schools whose services are free, because they fill an important place in our general educational scheme. Most of these schools—and we are glad to include ours among them—are improving year by year. Good teachers are maintained in our school on a yearly salary basis, instead of eight or nine months. Good courses of study, good executive management, a good student body, good equipment and good facilities for the placement of graduates are considered the most important factors of the Tyler Commercial College and School of Business Administration.

The most valuable asset that any institution depending upon the public for patronage can have is a reputation for leadership in its field. The name of the school on a diploma must give prestige to the graduate, otherwise the applicant for a position is at a great disadvantage.

The Tyler Commercial College and School of Administration has been the leader in its field for thirty-two years. Every business training school has been in existence long enough to be familiar with schools will vouch for this statement.

Our school is accredited by the National Association of Accredited Commercial Schools. Our graduates are preferred by the larger business concerns throughout the United States. It costs no more to attend our school that has both a national and an international reputation than it does to a small school. YARNS OF COLONEL TRUE

Readers of this newspaper are invited to write to Colonel True and tell him of their own remarkable experience. Address Colonel True, in care of THE STANTON REPORTER. Every person writing the Colonel will receive free membership card in The Amalgated Association of Bull Throwers.

Dear Colonel True:

While I was living in Moroliva, a few years ago, I saw some of the biggest trees in the world. One of them was so large it took two men to walk around it.

Illia Mae Tom, Stanton

Madam: No doubt you have seen some large trees in Moroliva. I dispute nobody's word. But I maintain that the largest trees in the world grow in South America. I saw some monsters there in 1876 when my brother, Ossie, and I were exploring that continent.

While roaming in the jungles one day, we were captured by a tribe of tough cannibals. They did not eat us because we had been living for some time on the sap from rubber trees and the tribe's official taster pronounced us inedible. However, we were kept as slaves.

It was our misfortune at this time for the chief of the tribe to take a fancy to a monkey he saw in the jungles, and for the animal to escape to the top of a large tree when his warriors attempted to capture it. Ossie and I were set to work felling the tree in order that the monkey might be caught.

It was a very large tree, but we set to work with axes and chopped diligently for many weeks. As we neared the center of the tree we were in so far that no sunlight could reach us and we worked by the light of a torch. Our meals were sent in to us by swift-footed messengers in relays. For instance, food to be eaten on Sunday was dispatched to us on Thursday; Monday's food was started in on Friday so it would reach us on time.

When we had reached the center of the tree, we came out and saw daylight for the first time in five months. We then approached the tree from the opposite side and began chopping vigorously.

We had chopped into the tree perhaps a hundred feet when we came upon a huge tree borer. He was between forty and fifty feet in length and about nine feet in diameter, with a head like an auger and a universal joint in his neck. The creature was asleep, and before awakening him we tied a log, about 15 feet long, to his tail so that when he awoke and bored into the tree to escape us, he was brought up short by the log catching across the hole he had made. He then backed out and tried another place, with the result that in a few weeks he had bored far into the tree and it was about to fall.

We withdrew from the tree then and after waiting two or three days we were awarded by a slight breeze that toppled it. But all of our work was in vain. The tree fell across the Andes mountains, breaking off the top half, which fell into the Pacific ocean and the monkey was drowned.

Dear Colonel True:

A great many of my friends have inquired how I got my start in the world and I am taking this way to inform them. An oil company drilled a well on a farm I was renting, many years ago, but it turned out to be a dry hole. After they abandoned it, I dug up the well, sawed it into short lengths and sold them for post holes.

J. H. White, Stanton, Texas

Sir: I guess there must be a couple of million men got their start that way, judging from what I hear.

I was a rich man once, also, but misfortune reduced me to my present financial condition, which is deplorable. I had built up a good business out in California, packing Pacific coast sea breeze in barrels and shipping it to inland markets. One barrel of my concentrated sea breeze released in a big hotel would make all the guests dream about Hawaiian hula girls, etc. The secret of the success of this business was in my patented concentration process by which I was able to pack a large quantity of this invigorating sea breeze into one barrel.

It was a good business while it lasted, but one summer when I took a vacation I left my brother Ossie in charge of the automatic concentrator and packer. He went to sleep on the job, leaving the machinery running, and during the night a hurricane blew up. The next shipment that went out contained two hundred barrels of concentrated hurricanes and when my customers opened them up they lost confidence in me.

I became discouraged then and quit the business. I had several hundred barrels of breeze on hand at the time, but was able to sell it to the chamber of commerce to send out as samples to prospective citizens.

Former champion Jack Dempsey, who promoted the Baer-Schmeling contest, has Baer under contract for future battles and is now hailed as the successor to Tex Ricard in big-time promoting.

Charles E. Kent of Los Angeles, gave an exhibition of "engineers' problems" in whittled pieces none of which were solved, so inexplicably were the different woods linked. Kent won't tell how it's done and claims the whittling championship.

DISPELS MYSTERY OF BANK BUSINESS

Country Banker Gives Simplified Picture of How a Bank Works to Help Other People's Business

A COUNTRY banker recently prepared the following simplified statement for his neighbors on just how a bank goes about helping them: "It is the most important part of a bank's business to lend money. Of all the money deposited in a bank, the law requires that a certain percentage be kept on hand as a reserve to meet the demands of depositors. It is the business of its officers to lend the balance conservatively and safely.

"The loans of a properly managed bank are invariably made to those it believes are able to repay, and always on condition that they be repaid at a stipulated time.

"The promise of an individual to repay a loan to a bank on a certain date is as sacredly inviolable as the promise of a bank to repay its depositors on demand, or, in the case of a certificate of deposit, on the date it falls due. When it comes to be known of an individual that he 'always pays,' his credit is established and his bank is always glad to extend him needed accommodations.

"A well managed bank never capitalizes industries. That is, it does not place its loans in fixed form, but puts them where they are to be used for temporary requirements, and where they will be taken up at the time specified.

How a Bank Lends

"It is not the function of a bank to become a partner in industries, nor could it be legitimately done with the money of depositors. Its loans must be kept in 'liquid' form,—that is, repayable in cash at stated intervals.

"A bank must use the greatest discrimination in making loans. A stranger cannot expect accommodations. It is customary for the borrower to make a statement of his financial affairs, which is kept in the bank's records. It is a punishable offense to make a false statement for the purpose of borrowing funds.

"Naturally, in their dealing with the regular depositors of the bank, its officers become well acquainted with their characters and their resources and are thus in a position to determine how large a line of credit each one is entitled to. That is one of the great advantages of being a bank depositor.

"The man who knows how to get into debt wisely, that is, who borrows money with which to make more money through legitimate enterprise, is the borrower whom the bank is looking for. By the frank interchange of opinion and a free discussion of various projects, the borrower is often guided and helped by his banker.

"In order to procure a line of credit at a bank three things are important:

1. A statement of assets showing a basis of credit in the way of invested capital, or collateral of sufficient value to cover amount of loan, or
2. An endorser whose credit is established at the bank; and
3. Average deposits of a sufficient amount to justify the extension of the desired accommodation."

AS WILL ROGERS SEES IT

Will Rogers recently told why the banks had got into trouble. "Don't blame it all on the bankers," he said. "When we all needed money they loaned it to us—but when they needed it we couldn't pay it back."

Advertising Aids Business Revival

NEW YORK.—Aggressive concerns are expanding business by effective advertising despite depressed business conditions, declared A. W. Diller, advertising counsel, at a bankers' conference here recently.

"Is 1933 a good year in which to advertise?" Mr. Diller asked. "Yes, if 1933 is a good year to stay in business, to reinforce the public's confidence in you, to put more business on the books. There is new business to be had today and aggressive companies are getting it. But new business will come in only if you go out for it. Advertising certainly goes out for it.

"Will people read newspaper advertisements these days? They will read anything that interests them. There are plenty of present-day arguments for business."

Advertising Mistakes

A QUESTION before many of us is what change of advertising policy, if any, should be made in view of present financial and business conditions. It is perfectly natural for us to give consideration to some degree of retrenchment, but it is dangerous to let reduction in expenditure be such as to bring about a real gap in the continuity of the advertising. It is a common mistake for some advertisers to think that they can turn advertising on and off, like water from a faucet, and expect it to become immediately effective whenever they are prepared to resume operations. Advertising does not work that way. Temporary conditions should not influence us to make too serious inroads on the program of advertising, which can be wisely conceived only on a long term basis. Francis H. Sisson, President American Bankers Association.

FOR FAILURE PROOF BANKING STRUCTURE

Speaker Outlines Threefold Cooperation Between Bankers, Government Officials and the Public to Maintain Bank Standards

TWO elements beside the bankers themselves are required in order to have the nation universally the type of banking it should have, Francis H. Slisson, president of the American Bankers Association, declared in a recent address. He said that the efficiency of government officials upon whom the people rely to supervise the banks properly, and the patronage of the people themselves are factors in the kind of banks a community shall have. "There can be no question that the people of the United States should have banks immune from failures and wholly free from bad or questionable banking," Mr. Slisson said. "It is not enough, as President Roosevelt has said, that while some bankers had been incompetent or dishonest, this was not true in the vast majority of our banks. A situation should exist in which there is not even a small minority of bankers open to question. There should be no room for dishonesty or incompetency to exercise any influence in banking anywhere."

"While bad faith and bad management enter the human factor in all types of business, their effects in banking should be surrounded by such special safeguards as to render them no longer a factor in bank failures. The responsibility for bringing this about, however, cannot rest upon the bankers alone, for this means to accomplish it are not wholly in their hands. There are other essential elements. "One is the efficiency of government supervision. Since we rely so greatly upon supervision, it may, unless it is of the highest order in safeguarding the public interest, create a sense of false security. Supervision would render banking impossible, but it has failed to do so. There was supervision by presumably the highest type of bank supervisors in every one of the instances of questionable banking that has shocked the attention of the country during the past three years. There is a thorough strengthening of supervision is clearly called for if the people are to rely on it to the fullest extent for the protection of their interests."

The Public's Part
"Another essential factor in maintaining good banks involves the part played by the public in banking. There is certainly a responsibility on the people themselves to support that type of banker whose rigid adherence to sound principles makes a sound bank, rather than to give their patronage to the unscrupulous banker who may be easier to do business with, but whose methods create a weak bank.

"Bank customers are charged with a great responsibility in protecting the safety of their banks in respect to their selection of the banks as borrowers. Banks were failed because many of their loans and securities, created in good faith by bankers in cooperation with the business interests of the country, proved sound under subsequent conditions. An amount loan is secured by the borrower as well as the banker. A bank is only as sound as its borrower, and this applies also to the banking structure as a whole in relation to the economic condition of the nation as a whole.

"A bank is not a bank public institution, but in a respect of sense it has responsibilities to the public, but so has the public in its responsibility to the bank. It is one's own responsibility to select a bank, whether a banker or as a banker, with care and public sentiment. The responsibility of the public servant, however, is to protect the best interest of the community, and it is the duty of the banker to cooperate with the public in this regard. But he can not do this unless the public itself is equipped with a sound knowledge of the principles of banking and the soundness of the banker's credit, and a sound knowledge of the principles of banking and the soundness of the banker's credit, and a sound knowledge of the principles of banking and the soundness of the banker's credit.

"The American people at Washington has taken hold of this problem in a very real sense. The American people are showing leadership toward the solution of this problem. The strongest feature of the present program will be found in emphasizing the joint responsibility of the public, of bankers and of government officials together with the banker's responsibility in creating the best banking structure possible."

IMPROVED features in a single source of the best type. A feature of the New Remington portable typewriter is the compactness of the design. Methodist Church Notes

W. B. VAUGHN, Pastor
We would like to see the members of the church at Sunday school and church next Sunday. Some class will welcome you no matter what the age may be. The pastor will preach at the 11 o'clock hour on "Forgiving."
At the evening hour there will be a special Sunday school program. This will be a very interesting program. It will be a play, "The Good Shepherd," using about fifteen characters. The young peoples' class is sponsoring the program. Be sure to come. All are invited.
We are having choir practice each Friday evening. Already we can see the results of this practice. The choir is learning new songs and giving some special music each service. If you sing come and join with us.
The pastor will preach at Lenora Sunday afternoon at 3:30. All are invited to be with us at this service.

Stanley and Rex Hamner have gone to Winters to work.
There are blessings even for the deaf and dumb. They cannot listen to us bewail economic conditions.
We all have a right to our own thoughts, but there are times when it is not wise to express them.
We are perfectly willing to pay an income tax if the government will guarantee us an income that is taxable.
When the government sends a bog business crook to jail it ought to include the lawyer who coached him.
