HEAVY RAINS FALL IN KENT CO.

Several Kent County 4-H Club Members At A&M

College Station, May 20, Probably the only things outnumbering the 1,800 4-H Club members at the Texas 4-H Roundup June 2-3 at Texas A&M University will be their talents and hopes.

The 4-H members will come from every part of the state to compete in over 30 contests and demonstrations. State 4-H officials say that about 600 adults including county and assistant county Extension agents, adults 4-H leaders, friends of 4-H, contest donors, and members of the board of directors of the Texas Youth Development Foundation will attend the Roundup.

Representing Kent County at the annual state contests will be 14 club members 2 adult leaders, and the 2 Extension agents. Entomology team members Gaylon Hudson, Chuck Kimmel, David Senn, and Mike Wilson will enter the contest on insect identification and insect control programs. Field Crops Demonstration team Minette Geeslin and Pauls Mayer will present a demonstration on the cotton boll weevil program. Rifle team members Lisa Cravey, Vena Cravey, Susan Wallace and Bill Wallace will compete with other marksmanship teams. Soils Judging team members David Geeslin, Parker Kidd, Bill Parks, and Tommy Stanaland will judge soil characteristics.

All members attending the Roundup have already been named county and district winners in their demonstration and judging contest. State 4-H leaders say that only those members who have won first or second place in district competition are eligible to compete in the state contest.

Frankie Harrison Gets R.N. Degree

Frankie Harrison, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Odell Harrison will graduate from Methodist Hospital School of Nursing with an R.N. degree, on June 11th, St. John's Methodist Church 8 p.m. in Lubbock. Frankie started school in Jayton and finished Jayton High in 1968. She was active in 1st Baptist Church youth choir, 4-H, where she was Gold Star girl one year, band, student council and sports. She did her college work at Wayland Baptist College in Plainview where she was secretary for Dr. Reese and Dr. Bowen, Science Dept. She attended a summer session at L.C.C. in Lubbock. Entered nurses training in Sept. 1969 at Methodist Hospital where she acted as organizer for the student devotional period and director of it for 1 year, an annual staff 1 year, editor annual 1 year. She's the youngest member of the graduating class and would like for her many friends to feel they may attend graduating exercises and

The good old Kent County soil, once again is soaked and everyone should be happy.

It began falling Thursday, and by Monday Kent County was wellsoaked, with a minimum of three inches, and as much as seven inches reported in some places.

This rain came just right for farmers who had not yet planted. Early June is considered an ideal time to plant cotton.

Many of the stock tanks in the ranches were dry, and many of them are now full, or have considerable water in them. So once again, Kent County farmers have the one thing they need most--moisture.

Drought Plans Needed

By Rhett H. Johnson
Soil Conservation Service
Needless to say, "We are in a drought in Kent County." Each livestock operator depending on native rangeland for his forage production has or is in the process of deciding what adjustments he can make to balance his livestock numbers to the forage being produced. These adjustments need to be made early enough to avoid animal weight losses, injury to forage plants, costly feed bills, and a drop in live-

Crop Residue Management

Crop residue management is one of the most important of all Soil and Water Conservation practices in use today. Its greatest value is perhaps in Rolling Plains where rainfall is limited, where both wind and water erosion and problems, and where soil-improving crops are not a part of normal operations. However the organic content of soils under any climate can be maintained or improved through the use of the crop residue.

This Week In Jayton

Thursday, two weeks ago I was in Jayton, Rex Alexander came into the office, and he was really singing the blues. A big drought was on, and it looked like it would not rain in time to do any good. Also, he said in recent months several businesses had closed, and others yet to close, and he felt Jayton was a town doomed to quick oblivion. But, Rex being an old timer, missed the weather this week. It did rain, and it came in time for the farmers to get their crops in. The farmers used to say, there is not a thing wrong with this country that a good rain and a young calf could not fix. We may even raise a bumper crop this year, who knows? The one thing you can say for sure, the postal service has had some changes. The new 8c stamp has the most interesting glue I have ever used. Its simply awful. Try it.

We can believe all the Associated Press International and Associated Press political men have been giving us through the daily press, this session of the Texas Legislature is just about the best one we have ever had. Members of both house, and their leaders, according to the reports given us, have completely forgotten about the good of the public, and about the public needs, and about every law they have passed, has been political--to help a political friend, or to help a political enemy. More, can a man go to the Legislature and work for the people. He has to be a member of the team, or he is nothing. If he has a pet project he wants passed, he has to vote for all kinds of bad laws, in order to get enough votes to pass his bill. In my judgment, perhaps the worst piece of law ever passed in the Legislature, is the redistricting bill. According to the reports we get, if you examine it, every line of it, wasn't to care for the people, but completely poli-

Baptist Vacation Bible School June 7-11

The First Baptist Church announces the beginning of the vacation Bible school to begin June 7 through 11 at 8:30 through 11:30 a.m.

Everyone is invited to attend ages begin 3 through 12. Now is the time to start planning to go and get someone to go with you. There is a lot of fun, singing, doing hand work. You will be so proud of learning the Bible. Refreshments will be served.

Wm. Smith Finishes 8 Weeks Basic

Army Private William R. Smith, 24 son of Mr. and Mrs. Travis R. Smith, Rt. 1, Jayton, recently completed eight weeks of basic training at the U.S. Army Training Center, Infantry, Ft. Polk, La.

He received instruction in drill and ceremonies, weapons, map reading, combat tactics, military courtesy, military justice, first aid, and army history and traditions. His wife, Charylene, lives at 601 N. Grace, Stratford.

He is politically inspired. Friends were taken care of, and also exercised.

Wouldn't it be good if we could send some men to the Legislature who could pass some laws that were concerned with the welfare of the people, rather than the self-perpetuation of the politicians?

Everyone that has the occasion to ride on the By-pass roadskirting the city of Lubbock, will certainly be glad a spokesman said. The new pastor will move to Jayton this week and will be ready to be helping with the work.

Perhaps the most misunderstood, misrepresented and mistreated group or class of people ever known in American history is the present group of young men, from teenagers, to those up to 25 years of age. Many Texans consider the young Texas male, under 25 years of age to be immature, unstable, and completely unreliable and there is nothing any of these young men can do to prove themselves to be otherwise. If they choose to be individuals, and set their own course in life, by letting their hair grow, this within itself to most people, not only classes them as immature, and completely without character, regardless of any other factor. Recently a young college senior, was given a minor traffic ticket. He wore his hair unusually long. He was working his way through college, and money was not easy to come by. After giving the matter careful consideration, he decided he had better get a hair cut before going to corporation court to answer his ticket. He didn't feel like he could get a fair hearing with his long hair. He said "When the Judge sees my long hair, he will throw the book at me, without giving regard to anything else, except my long hair." And, I am sure he had it figured out right.

AN EDITORIAL

What About Men Under 25- Years Of Age? Are They All Immature And Unreliable ?

Young men seeking employment, find long hair will be a great handicap in getting a job. Of course, in this matter you cannot blame the employer. He has the right to say what kind of people he will hire.

Perhaps the greatest discrimination of all, against our young men, is in the area of insurance. The Texas Inurance Commission, that sets the rates for automobile insurance, is really down upon these men. If a young man is under the age of 25, there is no way he can get a fair consideration on his insurance rates. He automatically comes under a high rate regardless of his character, his ability or his record. The state agency setting rates considers all young men under 25 to be immature, irresponsible and unreliable. There is no way he can prove himself to be otherwise. Just being under 25 is all it takes to get him the high rate.

I have a son who is 24 years of age. He has proven himself to many people to be sober, reliable, mature and of sound judgment. He is a good driver, and has a good record. In his several years of driving, his insurance holder has paid out less than a hundred dollars on him, and this was a case where the other party involved was at fault. He is a better driver than I am, and has a better driving record, and a better traffic record than I have, and yet his automobile insurance costs him almost twice as much as mine costs. What is the difference? Just one factor, he is under 25 years of age, and to the people setting the insurance rates, this within itself, without any other consideration, makes him immature, irresponsible, and a bad risk.

I have another son who is 18. He has been a licensed driver since he was 14. He does not have a single accident of record, and his insurance company has never paid out a dime on account of his driving. He is a better driver, and a slower, more careful driver than I am, but because within a three year period he was given one speeding ticket, and two city tickets for, what he said was driving through a traffic light on yellow, his insurance was cancelled, and he had to go through state assigned risk to get liability insurance, and no insurance on his vehicle. Why was he cancelled out, when he had cost them no money? Simply, because he was a high school student, and because of his young years, they considered him to be immature, unreliable and undependable, and they wanted to get rid of him before he did cost them any money.

Now, in the face of all of this, there is one State agency that will take young men, under 25 years of age, and screen them for a very important, responsible job. They find many of them to be mature and reliable. This is The Texas Department of Public Safety. For many years they have been hiring young men from 20 to 35 years of age for perhaps the most responsible jobs the State has. See Page 2...

UNKEL ZEKE SEZ

DEAR MISTER EDITOR:

I made the mistake of bringing up to the fellers at the country store Saturday night how everything is getting switched around these days, and the subject caught on like striking a match to see how much gas is in the jug. The feller that runs the store final said he was going to have to switch to sleeping days and working nights if we didn't wrap up the ball of yarn and go home.

Bug Hookum got the floor and kept it longer than anybody wanted him to, and Ed Doolittle went home with a handful of newspaper clippings he didn't even get to peruse as evidence. Bug was lit up about these claims lately of how worthless is all the medicines folks use.

This piece Bug had saw said Americans spend $1.8 billion a year on pain killer, mouthwash, laxatives and mouthwash that ain't worth a dime. Bug was wondering if copper bracelets for rumatism and deodorants was put in the same class, and if buying all this stuff can be wrote off as a tax loss.

Actual, Bug allowed, it probable could be proved that whatever a man thinks helps him does. He recollected a while back where this scientist said vitamin C would keep you from having colds and everybody made a run on the stuff. But since the permtion died down, Bug said, people jable have gone back to w-stever cold remedy they tk ik might do the job. Bug said he hopes nobody says a pint of carbolic took at the first sneeze will prevent a cold, cause sure enuff somebody would try it.

Science has switched so many things around, Bug allowed, til we can't be shore what is real and what ain't. Ever now and then we git reports where they is coming up with a pill that will take the place of eating, but Bug was of the mind that switch won't work. They is to many folks that live to eat instead of eat to live, was Bug's words.

Ed final got to report where he had saw 20 per cent of the barbershops in this country was closing. He didn't git to go through his clippings on this matter, but he said it looked like more advertising fer the papers. Some years back, Ed recalled, this big outfit that makes farm equipment quit running ads and invited barbers to their plant onct a year fer a feed and tour. The company figgered barbers talking about their equipment was worth more than newspaper ads, but now they'll have to switch back to ads to git the word out.

Personal, Mister Editor, in all this turning around I ain't shore the busiest feller allus is to be admired. The bee and the musquiter is busy, but we praise one and swat the other. I recall hearing that a fanatic is one that loses sight of his objective and redoubles his effort.

Sincerely,
Unkel Zeke

sidue practice. The organic litter in or on the surface of the soil serves as a protective coat to the soil against extreme temperatures, and keeps the soil open for free movement of soil air and water.

Progress has been made in recent years in applying the practices; farm machinery has been improved, adapted, and even developed that will permit and encourage the widespread use of the practice. Likewise, the use and management of residue-producing crops has been geared to fit into a crop residue management style of conservation farming.

It is recognized that the primary benefits from crop residue management come from the physical effects of organic material on the land as influenced by climate. The organic content of the top five inches of the soil is greater where residues are left on the surface as compared to residue completely turned under. It is a well known fact that the mineral and plant food content in the soil. Experiments have proved this to be true, but the effects are not always immediately reflected in crop yields. In fact, with a soil that is depleted in organic content there may not be any appreciable improvement in crop yields.

And the way today's women look and feel about themselves is exciting, too. This is one of the things that makes my work at Barbizon so very rewarding. It's always a thrill for me to see our girls so perfectly poised and immaculately groomed. They really make the most of their personalities and appearance, and they do it with such apparent ease.

THIS WEEK

when they get it completed. It jogs the traffic in and out, on the access road, and then back on the overpasses, and keeps the driver confused. One thing about it, if they don't get it completed soon, the people of Lubbock and the South Plains will not have to worry about the population explosion, because they are thinning out the people very rapidly on this by-pass and the tangent streets.

The traffic interchange on the northeast outskirts of Lubbock has become quite a patch-work puzzle for people going into Lubbock. Since they added the 19th Street, and the 4th Street signs, it helps some.

However, I had already solved the mystery, and learned how to get where I wanted to go. As I approached the monstrous network of criss-crossing strings of concrete, I just studied a moment, and tried to decide what I considered the most likely thing to do, and then took that course, and I came out where I wanted to go.

For instance as you approach from U. S. 82 East, and you want to go off to your right, you simply take the left lane. If you want to go left, you simply take the right lane. On modern highways, this formula will nearly almost work. Very simple you see.

About Men Under 25 Years Of Age?

This is for Highway patrolmen, and Drivers license patrolmen.

At the present time the Texas Department of Public Safety has a total of 1,015 young men under 25 years of age, which they have taken and screened, trained, and given the badge of authority of the State of Texas, and given them a gun to help enforce that authority, and put them out on the very important and mature assignment of enforcing the laws of the State of Texas.

Why, do you suppose the State agency, charged with the great responsibility of enforcing state laws, and keeping the peace of the state, will take these young men, and give them badges and guns and such great responsibility, when another state agency takes the position, in fact, that all of them are immature and not worthy of such responsibility? Well, I have an opinion about it. The insurance companies, and the men who set the rates are interested in one thing, and one only, and that is making money. They tumble all young men in one class, and take the attitude that all are bad risks, and they are not interested in treating them as individuals, and judging each man on his own merits.

How do you suppose these 1,015 young men are responding to their big jobs with the DPS? Are they proving trustworthy or not? Keep in mind this 1,015 young patrolmen, represents 60% of the total strength of the Texas Department of Public Safety total uniformed personnel. When you take out of the remaining 40% the supervisory officers, such as sergeants, lieutenants, captains, majors and colonels, this leaves nearly all of the rank and file officers who are on day to day duty in the under 25 class.

Recently I contacted Major Charles Bell, the Regional commander at the Lubbock office. I cited him these statistics which I had received from the State office, and asked him tell me how they were getting along with their young officers, their problems with them, if any, and how they were better, or not so good, as the older type men.

He would not consent to the use of the word "problem" in connection with any of his officers. He said in many ways the young men were outstanding, such as their energy and their ability to learn. He thought a 20 year recruit would perhaps learn much quicker than a 35 year old recruit.

He thought that with the younger men, it took a longer period of time for them to get the kind of discipline from them, that it did for the older men.
Another matter (he would not say problem) was in screening the applications, when they apply to enter the service. The older men usually have records of previous employment, and their records may be checked, which helps the DPS to determine whether or not they will make good officers even before they are signed up.
Most of the young applicants, below 25 years of age, are coming out of college or the military, and the DPS can not so well judge them in advance, because of this lack of record.

"Are you getting some good officers in this below 25-year age group?" Major Bell was asked. "Certainly" he replied quickly. And then he added that he felt as a whole, the class of officers, even in this below 25 age group, was much better and higher, and made better officers, than they were getting 10 or 15 years ago, even with men of the higher age bracket.

The thing that is happening with the DPS and its young men, is also the same story in most city police departments. Most of them look like slick-faced kids. But take it from Major Bell, many of these kids are completely mature and accept the gravest of responsibility with seriousness.

Perhaps there are many men in the under 25 bracket that are not very mature. But there are a great many who are. How about giving them an opportunity to prove themselves? I can see nothing wrong with that.

Those who expect to reap the blessings of freedom must undergo the fatigue of supporting it.

Thomas Paine Sept. 12, 1777

IN MEMORIAM

Let us pause for a moment to commemorate the many brave men who have given their lives defending our freedom every day.

The way of life for which they fought can only be maintained by a constant vigilance on the part of all Americans. Not all battles are fought on foreign shores. They often have their beginnings in our own community.

Are we as conscientious in choosing our city and state officials as our national leaders? NOW is the time to stand up and be counted as AMERICANS. Uphold the issues you believe to be of real importance to your community and do not be reluctant to speak out against those which undermine our basic rights.

Be an ACTIVE participant in your government. It is the firm foundation on which we can build a strong America. SUPPORT AMERICA as a lasting memorial to those courageous men who died so that we might have the opportunity to be free.

LIBERTY AND JUSTICE UNDER LAW

Our precious heritage embodied in the flag of the United States, is an alive today as it was when written for the ages in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution. It stands for all the world to see and for all Americans to cherish. And in the tradition of Washington, Jefferson, and Hamilton, we, too, have a privilege, a right, and a duty. While we may disagree as to the methods, we should not disagree as to the goal - that of preserving the greatest democratic society the world has ever known.

Our flag is a symbol, not of sentiment, but of history, the history of men and women willing to live and die for it. Surely this willingness is with us still, because daily we experience more of the blessings that are ours - more because we are Americans.

Vegetables

Vegetable Platter

Vegetables will be enjoyed and accepted by every member of the family if properly cooked and offered in variety. The cardinal rule is do not overcook. For most vegetables, use a small amount of boiling, salted water and cook covered until just tender. If you like strong-flavored vegetables mild, barely cover with boiling, salted water and cook uncovered. Vegetables are full of vitamins and minerals. To retain them, make use of cooking water. Vitamins are well preserved in both canned and frozen vegetables.

MEAT AND VEGETABLE PLATTER

|---|--|
| 2 tablespoons salad oil | 2 pounds smoked boneless shoulder butt |
| 2 medium onions, chopped | 3 medium smoked ham hocks |
| 3 or 4 cloves garlic, minced | About 6 small white potatoes |
| 3 tablespoons regular all-purpose flour | 2 pounds fresh green beans |
| 1 quart cold water | 1 pound smoked sausage |
| 1/2 teaspoon seasoned salt | |

About 1 hour and 45 minutes before serving:
1. In large kettle or Dutch oven heat salad oil; in it sauté onions and garlic until golden. Now blend in flour; add water and seasoned salt; bring to boil, stirring. Add boneless butt and ham hocks. Simmer, covered, 50 minutes.

2. Meanwhile, wash and pare potatoes; also wash and snip off ends from green beans, halving large ones crosswise.

3. Place potatoes, green beans, and sausage around boneless butt and ham hocks in kettle, simmer, covered, 30 minutes, or until potatoes and beans are tender.

Just before serving:
Remove meat to carving board. Arrange beans along center of large, deep platter with potatoes alongside. Cut boneless butt into 1/2-inch slices and sausage into 2-inch slices; arrange these, along with ham hocks, on top of beans. Spoon part of gravy over meat; pass rest in gravy boat. Makes 6 servings. (Leftovers can be used to make a delicious soup.)

for the 'useful arts'. That means something on a higher artistic level than just ads, which are plain commercialism."

Nevertheless, the court ruled that ads are indeed protectable by copyright and held the printer liable. The court said the Constitution drew no line between high-brow and lowbrow art.

In earlier years, many courts did draw such a line. But today, almost everywhere, ads are entitled to the same copyright protection as a book or a painting. Courts have recognized that a great deal of money and a great deal of talent are now going into the creation of ads.

It is still true, however, that a copyright won't stand up if the ad is dishonest. Thus:

A series of ads was developed by a sales agency, to be used by piano dealers. When one dealer began using the ads without permission, the agency sued him for copyright infringement.

But the judge refused to mix in, when he discovered that the ads were riddled with deceit.

"The law should extend its protection," he said, "only to ads that speak the truth."

Furthermore, only the specific details of an ad—the words, the drawings—are protected, not the general idea.

In another case a merchant advertised a contest in which people were supposed to write letters, telling why they liked to shop in his store.

Later, another merchant announced a contest along the same lines, but describing it in different language. Was this an infringement of copyright?

A court said no, since only the general idea had been copied. If general ideas were copyrightable, said the court, one person could stake out an entire field of thought and keep it as his own private monopoly.

LETTERS to EDITOR

Dear Clique,

I know that I am late with my renewal but at last I am getting it in the mail. We look forward to the "Home Town" paper each week. Turn first of all to your "About People That You Know" and sure enough I remember most of them.

As you know, Buck's health is not good and we are confined at home most of the time anymore. For that reason we have not been down that way in over a year now and I've miss seeing everyone. I noticed that Girard is planning a homecoming this year. I would surely love to make it. Good luck with your work and keep up the good news.

Sincerely,
Elsie Lundy

Ad Piracy

Poster ads for a circus were so eye-catching that a printer made up some copies—without asking anyone's permission. The owner of the circus promptly filed suit, charging infringement of copyright. But in court, the printer argued:

"These advertisements cannot be copyrighted. The Constitution says copyright is intended only

PLANNING YOUR VEGETABLE GARDEN

This little vegetable garden is fenced to keep out intruders. Rows are 15 feet long and most are 18 inches apart. Crops are thriving, the garden producing lavishly.

The success of your vegetable garden depends greatly on the choice of location. Choose a place in full sun, away from trees and shrubs (so vegetables needn't compete with their roots) and on as level an area as possible.

Consider this garden part of your landscape. Possibly you will want a low fence to set it off from the other sections of your grounds. If so, remember that tomatoes, cucumbers, peas and some beans are all vines and can be supported on the fence so build accordingly.

Think also of the nearness of a water supply for, if the summer is dry, artificial water will be necessary. And don't make your garden too large. Once soil is prepared and seeds are sown, a garden that is 20 by 50 feet in size takes only an hour a week to maintain.

What will you plant in your garden? Ask each member of the family which vegetables he likes and plant only those. There's no sense in planting something that won't be used.

Unless you have plenty of room it's better not to grow the vegetables that need a lot. Make a list of the ones you want to grow and group them according to the number of days they take to reach edible size. You'll find this figure in the seed catalogs and on the seed packets.

Then, on a piece of paper, lay out your garden. The short season vegetables that mature quickly, like radishes and onion sets for green onions, should be planted at one end so another vegetable like beans can be sown as soon as they are harvested.

Spacing between rows is important. Consider it when you plan. The closest that rows can be planted, even with upright-growing vegetables like carrots or beets, is a foot. Eighteen inches would give you more room to maneuver.

There are two practices you can use to advantage when you plan your garden: succession planting and intercropping. Both insure greater production from your garden space.

Succession planting means both planting the same vegetable several times during the season for continuing harvest and, as indicated above, planting one vegetable in a space vacated by the use of another. Intercropping means planting early-maturing crops between rows of long season plants. You can first set out plants of tomatoes or peppers, which need several feet in which to mature. While small they don't need the space, so grow rows of peas between them and harvest the peas before the larger plants need all the space allotted to them.

Spend some time choosing varieties of the vegetables you have decided to grow. There's a world of difference between them. In general, hybrid varieties are sturdier, produce more and have superior flavor. There are also varieties that are resistant to one or several common plant diseases. These are plainly indicated in catalogs and on seed packets.

Just because grandpa grew a certain variety is no reason why you should since newer ones are generally so greatly improved. If in doubt whether a variety thrives in your area, realize that seedsmen serve the country and usually handle only widely adapted varieties.

Planning a vegetable garden is fun—planting one is, too. It can be a family project, as can the later care of the garden and harvesting the crops.

LATIN IS NOT SO DEAD

Unlike the old soldier who fades away, Latin is now making a comeback in hundreds of secondary schools throughout the U.S. As a matter of fact, in many Philadelphia schools a brief introduction to Latin is now being offered at the fifth-grade level.

How come Latin is flourishing? One reason is that there are new innovations in the teaching of Latin. One such innovation, called "Artes Latinae," published by Encyclopaedia Britannica Educational Corporation, is built around a programmed textbook that divides up the subject into small bits of information. Tapes and films, a reader and filmstrips using cartoons to suggest phrases and Roman scenes with Latin titles supplement the text. The programmed text also rearranges the dense grammar that clogs up normal first-year courses.

How is Latin flourishing today? In Four Oaks, North Carolina, for instance, Mrs. Mamie Johnston, a Latin teacher in the South Johnston High School, reports that she first introduced "Artes Latinae" in the fall of 1969 with 75 beginners. This year the school has 42 continuing in second level and 75 new students who began in September 1970.

According to Mrs. Margaret Haynes, a teacher of Latin in Baton Rouge, La., "The psychological effect of continuing success with the programmed course caused our loss last year to be only 8 percent. Indeed, during the second semester we had two boys who failed every course but Latin." And that is true holding power!
