From The Desk of the City Manager

You couldn't tell it by our wonderful weather but it is still summer time and we are bound to have some more weather befitting the season. To many folks August means getting ready to go back to school, finishing vacations, company picnics, complete with flies, mosquitos, and the ever present ants of all varieties and descriptions, getting the crops laid by and generally winding up the crop year. Our City organization thinks of it as "Budget Time".

Seagraves and Hale Center will be the other non-conference foes before the Lopes take on Morton in the district opener. The Struves' 5-Month Trip

(Editor's Note: Mr. and Mrs. Arno Struve were on a five-month trip late last year and early this year. Their travels took them to the Orient, South Pacific, Australia, New Zealand and other interesting places. The Review requested a series of stories on their trip.

After we had returned to Alice Springs from Ross River it set in to rain in earnest. We were confined to the hotel most of the hours and were able to get out and walk around for brief periods of time only. On Saturday morning I set out to find a hardware store to borrow a wire cutter to chop up the barbed wire for the barbed wire collectors at home. It was necessary to reduce the lengths of wire to a more convenient dimension so as to be able to get the wire more readily into the luggage. I asked a "Black Fellow" to direct me to a hardware store which he then did. The wire taken care of Minnie decided to get her hair fixed and I walked down to the Todd River to see the rare sight water flowing in it. It is said that if you see the Todd flow you will return to Alice Springs. As I walked along the bank I passed several groups of black people celebrating the wetness. As I neared one group one of them called out to me, "You fellow want to cut wire?" I answered that I was the man provided to be the black man up town who had directed me to the hardware store. They were passing a bottle around and I was certainly glad that they didn't suggest that I partake. But I did stay and talk awhile. Their English is a kind of Pigin English. They speak English softly and gently and it makes one feel good to hear it. Their own tongue, however, sounds very harsh.

As I passed another group along the river one of them called to me and invited me to join them. A big fat "lubra", native woman, introduced me rather formally around the circle but again I was relieved that their bottle was at rest while I was in their presence. They were all very happy because of the rain and were using the unusual occurrence as an excuse to celebrate. One old woman in this group looked like she had had her face completely macerated and it healed into a mass of scar tissue. At their very best they are not very nice looking and this one was so hideous I couldn't look at her except in very brief glances.

The Flying Doctor Service and the "School of the Air" have establishments in Alice Springs. The visiting hours to go inside these places were never coincident with time we had available so we had to be content to seeing them from the outside. Most ailments are treated by radio, that is, all the station operators have two way radios and a standard kit of medicines. Should medical consultation be needed the two-way radio puts the patient and the doctor in communication. The doctor prescribes by number from the standard medicine kit as symptoms are described to him. Should the medical problem be an emergency of greater severity the Flying Doctor Service can take the doctor to the patient or bring the patient in to the doctor. Thus the interesting one morning to listen to the conversation by radio between a nurse and the doctor who were many miles apart. The nurse was reporting on the birth of a baby and the condition of both child and mother. The details were not in terms of ordinary language but it was easy to understand what was being reported. I suppose that after a while one would get used to the radio reports of this kind. In any case it would be highly educational.

The school of the air uses the same two-way radio system on the ranches. At a given hour all the children on the isolated places tune into the same frequency and are thus in contact with the teacher and at the same time with all the other students. It becomes a class room that covers hundreds and maybe thousands of square miles. The children recite in their turn just as if they were in the same room. A great need is thus taken care of.

The man who had the dream for these systems was a missionary to the outback who traveled for many years by camel. He had the visions for these things long before radio or the airplane actually became an every day practicality. He struggled for a long time to develop a two way radio that could be powered by pedal-power and he had to try many things before success came. His name was John Flynn and his memory is highly esteemed in all of the vast open spaces of Australia. There is a beautiful and modern church building in Alice Springs that has a room off the sanctuary in which are kept some of the original equipment used by him. Some of the equipment is from his camel days but most of it is the early and first radio equipment that was developed because of his efforts.

Long before the center of the continent was made habitable it became desirable to develop and build a means of communication from one side of the country to the other. The link between the south coast and the north coast was a telegraph line. It began at Adelaide and terminated at Darwin. One of the relay stations was located at a spring on the Todd River, thus an inhabited place called Alice Springs came into being. The old telegraph station buildings are still in existence and are kept as a kind of museum of these historical days. The station is a couple of miles out of the present town. We were told by the tourist bureau that the river was over the road and that it would be impossible for us to get out there. Before we gave up we enquired of a taxi driver if he could take us to the "Telegraph Station". He softly spoken old gentleman obviously enjoyed the role of tour guide. We didn't have to cross the river at all to reach our destination and we wondered why in the world we had been given such erroneous information. He not only took us up there but stayed with us the whole time pointing out all of the things of interest at the old station. Nearby there was an enclosure that held emus and kangaroos and other native creatures. It was so rainy that we merely glanced at the animals kindly and lovable individual.

In the afternoon we had reservations to fly to Darwin. While waiting at the office of the airline in town we noticed a couple who were apparently waiting for the same plane that we were. They seemed rather shy and even backward. I thought to myself that they were probably on their first journey away from home and didn't know very much about getting around. But what a misjudgement that was! There will be more to tell about these people later in this story.

Our plane to Darwin was a Fokker Friendship a type of plane that has long been the standard means of air travel in the long distances of the low population density areas. It is a fan-jet and apparently a very practical plane for the outback. There is so much development and travel increase that it is being replaced on the heavier runs by a larger full jet ship they call the Fokker Fellowship. These planes are made in Holland. Both are very fast but the latter being a full jet is much the faster of the two. The Fellowship travels at a speed in excess of 500 miles per hour. We were privileged to ride in both of them and enjoyed them immensely.

On the run to Darwin we made two local stops. One at Tennant Creek and another at Katherine. These are mining towns and the traffic to them consists of passengers connected with the mines and the mail and air-freight. The country below was most desolate in appearance though it had more vegetation than a pure desert. The rains we had experienced seemed to be a part of a general precipitation over the whole center land as we could see signs of wetness on the ground. As we flew we followed the narrow highway through and he would. He was a kind of soft spoken old gentleman whittings. We would call it a "black top" or asphalt road. They call it "The Bitumen". (Bitumen is a type of asphalt.) The main traffic on the road consists of "road trains" which are huge trucks with several trailers hung on behind. Cattle and all kinds of heavy freight are transported on these trains. We were able to make out one or two of these trains from our 30,000 foot altitude. They were very small looking and the road was a very slim ribbon.

After we left Katherine the captain of the plane invited anybody who might be interested to come and visit him in the cockpit. Of course Minnie and I jumped at the chance and were the first to take advantage of the offer. We met Capt. C. J. Kaye whose most cordial hospitality resulted in our seeing the complexities of the controls and instruments plus an interesting general conversation about America and Australia. We offered to go back to our seats a couple of times but he said we had plenty of time for others to come to the cockpit before we got to Darwin. We didn't insist too strenuously but finally felt we must give somebody else a chance to come up. Actually there weren't many others with our curiosity and before we got to Darwin I was back at the cockpit and watching the approach to Darwin.

The lights of Darwin appeared through the patches of rain. We had to pass through a thunderstorm that was quite exciting to me but apparently a common occurrence to the pilots. I wondered how in the world they maintained their orientation through the rain, wind and the night. Just before the landing I had to take my seat and fasten my seatbelt. There is much more sensation of actual flying on this relatively small plane than in the very large ones that we had been on.

One sight of the plane trip was the presence of an Australian celebrity on board. He was an Australian professional football player by the name of David Cantiller. We talked to him and found him interesting and friendly. He was an aborigine from the north of Australia and he was going home for a vacation. The northern aborigines are larger, stronger and more intelligent generally than the ones in the rest of the cou-

try. After we landed we had the need to engage a taxi into the city. Captain Kaye introduced us to the couple we had seen in Alice Springs and suggested that we share a taxi. He also suggested that since they were anxious to see the Darwin area as we were that we join forces the next day in hiring transportation to see Darwin. This we did and were enriched by the association. No only were we able to share the cost but their company was most welcome. Their names: Mr. and Mrs. Ed Hulme from Sydney. It developed that Mr. Hulme was a man of many commercial interests. He builds high rise buildings as developer and contractor, he builds factory buildings, he has a brick factory and operates an electronics manufacturing company. We would call him quite an operator.

In Darwin we were supposed to have reservations for accommodations in a motel. The taxi delivered the Hulmes at their motel and then took us to ours. The appearance of our motel was not to our liking after Minnie went in and inspected it we decided that since it wasn't very nice plus the fact that it was supposed to have been air conditioned but wasn't we were not obligated to stay there. I had held the taxi so that we wouldn't be delayed if we wanted to go elsewhere. After all it was nearing midnight and time to go to bed. We went back to the fit-

The sanctuary of Tapp Memorial United Methodist Church, New Boston, was the setting of the beautiful candlelight ceremony uniting in marriage Miss Virginia Mable Limpus and Mr. Larry Dean Raymond, Saturday, the twenty-fourth of July at seven o'clock in the evening. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leroy D. Limpus of New Boston, Tx. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. R.N. Raymond of Abernathy, Texas. Mrs. John N. Williamson, organist, presented a program of nuptial music prior to the ceremony. Selections included "Theme from Love Story," "One Heart, One Heart," "More," and "Love Theme from Romeo and Juliet." Other attendants were Miss Kathy Raymond, sister of the groom and

"The Wedding Prayer." The bride, who entered the sanctuary on the arm of her father, wore a formal gown of imported hand-clipped Chantilly lace and white peau-de soie. An arched empire silhouette was fashioned by the full shirred skirt of Chantilly lace which flowed into a chapel length train, and full sheer Chantilly lace bishop sleeves. The bodice, cuffs, and skirt were of imported peau de soie. Delicate lace details encircled the high neckline and waistline below the arched empire. The gown was accented with tiny double ring buttons on the back opening and cuffs and a peau de soie train above the train. An elbow-length veil of bridal illusion (fell from a semi-circle of silk roses, Her bouquet, fashioned from white and blue carnations and centered with white roses, was enhanced by satin ribbons, caught in love knots. Miss Charnita Spring of Lufkin, attended the bride as maid of honor while Mrs. Larry Limpus, sister-in-law of the bride, was matron of honor. Other attendants were Miss Kathy Raymond, sister of the groom and

At motel in hopes that they would have accommodations for us. Luckily they discovered a double reservation for the same persons which made it possible for us to get in. This double reservation itself was an occurrence of coincidence that illustrates the very good luck that we had time after time.

After we got settled in our room we went to the dining room to meet Captain Kaye. He was also staying at the same motel as were the other members of his crew; the co-pilot and stewardess. They were having their end-of-the-run meal. We had eaten on the plane. They had invited us to come and have a drink with them. We joined them but preferred not to partake of food or drink since we had been well satisfied during the flight. Even though it was late and we were tired the stimulation of company and conversation kept us involved and entertained for an hour or longer with these fine people. They wanted to know about America and we wanted to know about Australia.

Capt. Kaye and his group were such nice "kids" that we thought they were just the type people we would want our children to be. Truly we thought they were much like our own in many respects, but perhaps there is some prejudice involved!

The wet season had started and all commercial tours had stopped their operation as nearly all tourist activity had ceased. It was up to us to manage for ways and means of seeing Darwin. The first morning we contacted the Hulmes in their room and made plans to get a taxi. Our driver was knowledgeable and a good talker. He took us all over the city and immediate area. Although it rained all morning and sometimes very very heavily, we got a thorough look at the city and suburbs.

The locale of the Japanese bombing attack during World War II was pointed out to us. We went to the wharves on the water front and looked at the varied ships from all over the world tied up there. The many colors of skin and nationalities of the men at work and the sound

Mrs. R.H. Reynolds of Houston. Their identical gowns, of baby blue organza over taffeta were designed by the bride. The gowns featured fitted bodices, sheer puff sleeves, full skirts, and embroidered ruffles around the waistline and hem. The bow harts of baby blue organza were accented by shoulder length veils of illusion in a matching color. Each attendant carried a round nose-gay of summer flowers with multi-colored streamers. The groom chose as his best man Joe Johnson of Dallas. Groomsman were Wayne Raymond, Abernathy, brother of the groom; Don Raymond, Ft. Carson, Colorado, brother of the groom; and Larry Limpus, Alvin, Texas, brother of the bride.

Marriage vows were exchanged at the altar on which matching arrangements of summer flowers in gold altar vases were placed. The gold cross was further enhanced by single burning tapers. Twin spiral candelabra flanked the sides of the altar. Garlands of greenery, satin bows, and candles extended along the communion rail. The windows of the sanctuary held clusters of greenery and lighted tapers.

For her daughter's wedding, Mrs. Limpus wore a peach knit dress accented with peach lace and rhinestones. An organza rose combined with silk illusion fashioned the matching hat. Her corsage was a white cymbidium orchid.

The mother of the groom wore a ecru lace dress with matching accessories. At her shoulder she pinned a white cymbidium orchid.

Mr. and Mrs. Limpus were hosts at a reception for the wedding guests in the garden of their home. Entrance to the garden was marked with rows of hurricane candelabra. Guests were registered at a table covered with white linen, lighted by a single taper.

The bride's table was covered with white satin cloth and an overskirt of white voile. The tree-tiered cake, topped with miniature wedding bells, was complimented by a golden punch fountain. At the center of the table was an epergne of blue and white mums with blue candles. The groom's table, also covered in white, featured a chocolate cake and a coffee service. The entire reception area was outlined by roses, lilies, magnolias and lighted by hurricane candelabra.

For her wedding trip the bride chose a dress of baby blue organza, featuring a high neckline, empire waist and pleated skirt accented with a band of embroidery. The bride wore a white rose corsage. After a camping trip through the western states, Glacier and Yellowstone Park, and the Grand Canyon, the couple will be at home in Dallas where they are employed as teachers.

Mr. and Mrs. R.N. Raymond were hosts for a dinner in honor of their son Larry, and his future bride, Ginny Limpus. The dinner, held after the wedding rehearsal, took place at the Bostonian restaurant. Seated at the head table, which was decorated with blue and white flowers were the hosts, the honored couple and the bride's parents. The bridal couple presented their attendants with gifts at that time.

rounding it. One rather open corner that was in an uncrowded area upon which a motel was being built was reported to have cost the promoter $150,000. Although we were unable to take a single good picture because of the weather we counted the morning a successful experience.

In the afternoon the Hulmes had contacted a Wildlife Refuge Ranger and had arranged for him to take us some forty miles out in the wild country. The Ranger picked us up in his Landrover about 1 P.M. He brought along his little eight year old son. The boy had a tiny pet with him. It was a baby Kangaroo whose mother had been killed in a collision with an automobile. He had a pillow-case size sack that the little "Joey" kept going in and out of. The boy had a doll sized baby bottle with a tiny nipple that the baby kangaroo, or Joey, used for receiving sustenance every few minutes.
