Portales (Special) -- Nineteen high school students from across the United States are concluding an eight-week summer study of biology and ecology at Eastern New Mexico University in Portales.

The Student Science Training Program in Ecology, supported by the National Science Foundation, is designed for high-ability students from high schools with limited emphasis in ecological training in their science curriculum.

Dr. A. L. Gennaro, associate professor in biology at Eastern and director of the study, explained the program as "research participation." He commented that the students were given the basic tools for research methods in the field, methods of writing scientific papers and basic ecological concepts. "This is an original research project," Dr. Gennaro said, "not a mental exercise project."

The students were to answer the question "How do insect and reptile densities serve as an index of measurement to land use?" Dr. Gennaro explained that a stable grassland community will have certain amounts of animals and that as the land is used the amount will change. He noted that by this method, misuse of land could be determined before a notable decrease in vegetation.

Three groups of two students each are studying the insects, plants, and reptiles on three different areas. One study is being conducted at the Natural History Preserve about 10 miles from the Eastern campus which Dr. Gennaro explained is like the original prairie since no grazing has occurred there for almost 17 years. The other study is being made on heavily grazed area and another on an area of medium use.

The findings will be correlated with weather monitoring systems on the Natural History Preserve. One of the students is also collecting lizards to examine stomach contents to determine the insects eaten.

Besides working on this large project students also are working with researchers on other projects at the University and are assistants to graduate students. Dr. Gennaro expressed his amazement at the enthusiasm and hard-working nature of the students.

The students will finish their research in the next two weeks and prepare a paper on their findings. 7/19/72

THE PERILS OF THE COTTON FARMER...
(Text by Morris Wilkes)

Left to Right: Lightning presents an ever-growing problem to the cotton farmer by burning sometimes large areas of a planted field. The second photo shows damage to young cotton by hail and blowing sand. Mother nature has other ways of damaging a crop, by insects and disease. Tractor and field fires at harvest time are still another obstacle faced by the West Texas Cotton farmer. Gin fires also present trouble to farmers and ginners alike. Accidents will happen, but why always to South Plains cotton farmers? The last photo shows an overturned trailer in sight of its final destination, the cotton gin.

News Of Area Servicemen

Anville, Pa. (AHTNC) July 11 -- Cadet Jimmie L. Reeves, Route 2, Abernathy, Tex., is receiving practical work in military leadership at the Army Reserve Officers Training Corps advanced summer camp at Indiantown Gap Military Reservation at Anville, Pa.

Cadet Reeves, who is scheduled to receive a B.S. degree in 1973 from Virginia Military Institute at Lexington, is one of more than 10,000 students attending Army ROTC training at six installations in the U.S.

The six-week ROTC advanced camp provides an opportunity for cadets to develop and demonstrate leadership capabilities in a field training environment. The instruction supplements theories and concepts which cadets learned in the classroom on campus. Cadets normally attend the training between their junior and senior years. This enables them to better comprehend their final year of classroom work and to function as cadet leaders on campus.

The 20-year-old cadet is a 1969 graduate of Abernathy High School.

BRIEF
Mr. Bob Barton and his three children, Candice, Brent and Jo Beth, from Costa Mesa, Calif., are visiting in the home of his mother, Mrs. Jack Barton.
