GRAPE-GROWING EXPERIMENT REPORT GIVEN

LUBBOCK--In the land of cotton a new crop may soon appear--grapes.

The feasibility of grape production on the High Plains is being shown to be economically and practically sound, according to an agricultural research scientist here.

Basing his conclusions on six years of research findings, Dr. William Lipe, horticulturalist with the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station at Lubbock, noted that the potential of building a grape industry on the High Plains appears quite promising.

Explained Lipe, "A combination of climatic, biological, soil and economic conditions of this area of West Texas seems to offer strong possibilities for large-scale grape production."

The West Texas area, he said, is blessed with an abundance of cheap, well-drained sandy soils which are ideal for growing grapes. In addition, much of the High Plains is relatively free from cotton root-rot and Pierce's disease which plague grape production in other areas of the state.

Lipe also noted that the long, sunny days and cool nights of July and August, together with the dry weather, are highly desirable climatic conditions for grape production.

According to the scientist, research on grape production began at the Experiment Station in 1968 with the planting of a vineyard east of Abernathy.

"Production at the Abernathy vineyard has reached as high as six to eight tons per acre on some varieties the past two years, even with severe hail last May," he said.

"Hail frequency has been a major concern in our program," noted Lipe. "The hail last May uncovered the rather startling fact that some varieties of grapes possess the ability to regenerate from the tertiary buds after the primary buds are destroyed."

"What this means," he said, is that the hails in May and June probably would not cause a complete crop failure, one of the greatest potential hazards to grape production.

"Also," Lipe added, "an extensive study by TAES personnel has indicated that areas south and west of Lubbock experience fewer hail storms than other South Plains areas, making grape production in those areas more practical."

"Noting that the potential for grape production is being viewed from all angles in the study," Lipe said, "irrigation requirements for grapes are minimal, which relates well to the West Texas area. Using trickle irrigation as a means of studying water use, we have found that seven to nine acres-inches of irrigation water per year is about the average amount of water which would be needed to grow grapes in the Lubbock area. In 1973, no irrigation was required on the Abernathy vineyard."

Weed control research also is being conducted at the Abernathy vineyard.

"From our data," the scientist observed, "it appears that a combination of two or more herbicides would be necessary for adequate control in most commercial vineyards in this area. Near perfect control will be a necessity if trickle irrigation is to be utilized successfully."

"The economic situation also is very favorable for a grape industry on the High Plains," he reported.

"Prices for wine grapes range as high as $700 per ton for some varieties, with averages around $400 per ton. With yields averaging five to six tons on many varieties, the gross per acre would range from $2000 to $2400. Special varieties could be much higher."

The three-acre vineyard in Abernathy, he said, contains over 225 varieties of wine, table and juice type grapes.

According to Lipe, for table stock and potential wine varieties Siebel 910 (Verdelet) showed the most promise. Varieties which have excellent potential as juice or jelly stocks include Golden Muscat, Schuyler, Niagara and 23-4, which proved exceptional performers in our studies.

In addition to the research

ANTELOPES

Antelope Basketball

(By Sammy Hunley)

PLAINVIEW TOURNAMENT
The Antelopes, who were entered in the large school bracket of the Plainview Tournament, failed to win any trophies but gained a great deal of experience.

Playing without sufficient height to compete with the larger schools, the Antelope lost all three games but played inspired ball in each contest.

Clovis was their first encounter, and the highly-ranked team from New Mexico defeated them by a score of 95-71. Lubbock High School was given a scare by the 'Lopes as they stayed in the game until the final minutes of play. The score was in favor of Lubbock, 76-62. Big Spring was another tough test as they whipped the 'Lopes 90-57, ending the tournament play for Abernathy.

Ray Martin, who proved he could score against the big schools, was chosen to the Large School Division All-Tournament team. Ray scored 80 points in three games.

SLATON TOURNAMENT
The local girls won third place in the Slaton Tournament over the weekend with a 53-47 decision over the team from McAdoo, Jerri Hill and Sue Allen each had 14 points to lead Abernathy.

The girls defeated Grady, Texas, 53-46 in their first game of the tournament but lost to Slaton (who won the tournament) in their second game.

man's best friend...

At home... on the job... now and in the future, electricity should be ever-faithful, ever-present... just like man's best friend, and it's our pledge to make sure it stays that way.

Our next plant, now under construction, will use low sulphur western coal... later we'll be looking at coal gasification... a process that makes gas out of coal... and after that nuclear power.

Our planning engineers are constantly and consistently researching the best ways to make electric power for your use... analyzing the experiences of the past to be sure of the future.

You always get what you pay for when you plug in, switch on, turn the dial... 100% of every kilowatt you buy is usable. Clean, economical ELECTRICITY... always ready, always there, waiting to serve you — 24 hours every day.

LETTER

November 1973 Dear Friends in Christ: Christmas comes but once a year; however, what a thrill to remember what it really stands for instead of the rush of the season. This year has seen us very busy most of the time. Joyce has done much sewing for the girls, kept house, takes an extension course plus doing a lot of substitute teaching recently. The kids have their hands full with school work. Maybe that needs clarifying. The girls are the ones I mean. Jonathan is doing great in school, especially with the thrill of football beaming all over him. "Throw me some passes" is often heard around the house. The girls are loaded with extra curricular activities and very few holidays. Joyce feels I have been away from home more than at home, so the other day I took inventory. This year has seen me involved in 17 revivals, three weekend revivals, one youth camp (preaching in separate groups to both junior and senior campers), involved in three conferences, four missionary conferences and one as the evangelist at a campmeeting. Well, maybe I have been away from home more than I thought! But, because you prayed and supported us, we have seen over 130 people making definite decisions for Christ. The youth camp in Arkansas saw most of the campers leave the campground with victory in Christ. Several hundred have come forward in the churches deeply burdened for revival in their lives and in the church. In one church, the Spirit moved in and there was no preaching, I like it that way, and several times folk were coming to the altar without pleading from any person. God was there! We rejoice with those who have been saved, sanctified, reclaimed and those who have made real restitution; thus, the Lord used them in touching others who needed to be revived. Along with the above special services we have made several contacts for World Gospel Mission. It looks very favorable that we will see some new openings and some missionary conventions. This coming year I plan to spend more time in contacting pastors. Where they see the vision for missions I believe the people will also catch the vision. This will result in a deeper involvement in their own area, there will be those who will visit and possibly work for ten days or during their summer vacation on a WGM field; or it will mean that there will be some who will hear the call to go for Christ. Inevitably there will be a deepening of a burden for missionaries in supporting and praying for them. With contact work, I will still be in some revivals, and I trust in many missionary conventions. The task is great, it cannot be done unless you pray with a real burden for the lost and for us as a family in Christ. Joyce needs your continual prayers for leading the family while I'm away from home. Each of the kids are where they are today because of your concern and praying and their willingness to let God direct them. Don't let us down! We are sure you won't! Praise the Lord. Have a great Christ-centered Christmas and a tremendous New Year in the Spirit
