By Nanalee Nichols

I have a little dog, his name is Fergus McSquat. Big deal, huh? Fergus is a West Highland White Terrier...a little 18 pound, snow white (supposed to be) bundle of Scottish aggressiveness.

You see, we've always had big Labrador retrievers. I thought a nice, small lap dog would be pleasant. But I didn't want a "wimpy" dog, one that yapped or trembled. In that respect, Fergus certainly fits the bill... "wimp" he certainly is not.

In fact, he has nearly driven us crazy. Fergus doesn't realize he isn't a Labrador retriever. He goes right through the ticks and stick tights with the big dogs. He goes frog hunting in the edge of the pools, he rolls on dead turtles. In short, his weekly bath and every-other-day brushing does nothing to keep him neat looking. He looks like the little savage highlander he is descended from.

That was the least of our problems, however.

Fergus loved to bark at the ducks. He loved to chase the ducks. He loved to harass the ducks by leaping into the middle of their morning corn ration, standing and barking until they gave up and left in agitation.

In short, Fergus became not a Scottish terrier, but a Scottish Terrorist!

While we were on vacation he harassed the ducks until they left. Then they became a meal for something.

A few weeks ago we purchased a pair of gray French geese. They were adult size, but still had tufts of down. We thought they would be aggressive enough to ignore the little dog...after all, they tower above him in size.

But no, they were so young and insecure they just ran from him.

One Sunday afternoon we went down towards Cuthand to buy some ducks...and there he was...just what Fergus needed.

He loomed above the flock of chickens and ducks. He was snowy white, with a bright orange beak and beady, cold eyes.

Boris, Boris the gander. Grown, mean, greedy and hostile! Perfect.

We had to have him. The lady finally sold him to us. Boris resented being stuffed into a mesh bag, and spent the time going home ripping at the sack and hissing like a steam engine. Released, he would spread those awesome wings, hiss and make snake-like attacks with that long neck.

We turned him loose with the ducks and the other geese.

He whipped them into a little flock for him to dominate and herd around as he pleased.

And, somewhere along the line, he settled with Fergus.

We missed it. I regret that deeply.

I don't know exactly what portion of Fergus' anatomy the goose got, I suspect the fluffy white tail.

But the little fellow can be trotting happily along, see the flock of fowl up ahead and make a wide detour, glancing back over his shoulder to make sure no cold-eyed, long necked honker is behind him.

He doesn't sit and bark anymore at the ducks or geese.

In fact, he does his best to just forget they exist!

I've enjoyed this little drama immensely, so has Thomas. But no one, I'm convinced has enjoyed it more than Boris, who struts around making loud noises and (I swear) grinning a beakie grin!

Welcome Rains Fall On Area

"The quality of mercy is not strained, it droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven." The comparison of mercy to rain is not only apt...but the reverse is true also. For nothing is more merciful in a dry Texas summer than the gentle rain.

And that's exactly what fell Sunday night...gentle rain, accompanied by mild lightning and thunder.

Rainfall Sunday night averaged around one and one half inch, and fell slowly and helpfully.

Tuesday afternoon a sudden thunderstorm delivered another half inch, and Wednesday drizzle capped the merciful moisture off.

Drought stricken farmers and ranchers welcomed the rainfall gratefully.

It should do much to relieve crop problems and allow grasses to rejuvenate. Cotton is already expanding into bloom, and it is hoped that the pattern of drought established in June and early July will be broken enough for adequate moisture to fall during August.

POOR MAN'S SUPPER was mighty tasty! The Deport Methodist Youth served a bountiful supper of beans, cornbread, along with dessert, a variety of foods such as onions and pickles and drinks to a steady crowd last Friday night.

It was part of the group's fund raising efforts. (Staff Photo by Nanalee Nichols)

Letter To The Editor:

Dear Jenny,

I read with great interest your article on child abuse; it was very well written and is something we all need to think about and try to do something about.

I feel great pity for youngsters growing up in this world today. Toddlers or teenagers are our most prized possessions!

We live in a small town where jobs are not available, boredom causes so many to get into trouble. I don't have the answers to what we could do for our kids, but there is surely something we could do to help occupy part of their idle time.

Moms and dads both have to work and I know some would say let the parents take care of them. I believe that too...to a certain extent, but I would love to see some kind of program set up for our kids.

If anyone is interested, call me and we'll see what we can do.

Child abuse comes in many forms and I think not providing something for our young people is certainly one of these.

Sincerely,
Bocky Norman

Scudder Mentioned In Dallas Morning News Item

Many people may have seen the short item about Scott Scudder in the Dallas Morning News sports section. The article, which is highly complimentary of Scudder, also mentions "Scudder hails from Blossom, Texas, which is so small it doesn't even have a restaurant". Apparently, this sportswriter doesn't have very good eyes...since Blossom has more than one eating place!

Clothes Shopping Confusion

By Jenny Roach

Well, kids and parents, it is 4 weeks and 3 days till school starts. Aren't you all excited.

Some kids are moaning and groaning about summer was too short, or they're not ready to go back to school.

Some are jumping up and down because they are not going to be bored but 4 weeks and 3 days more.

But now starts the school shopping season. Kids and parents go to town shopping for school clothes. The thing parents have been saving their money and nerves for all summer. Here is how the school shopping goes.....

You get to town and go to that famous place first, WAL-MART. The cheapest place in town.

So you go to the shirts rack first. Your mother picks out the most adorable shirt on the rack and you say, "Mother everyone would laugh at me if I wore that shirt to school!"

So your mother puts that shirt back on the rack and you come around with a shirt that you think is the best shirt in the world, and your mother looks at it and says, "There is no way a child of mine is wearing a shirt like that!"

Then the child says, "But Mom everybody wears stuff like this!"

"Well, You're not, so go put it back on the rack," she protests.

So then you go to the blue jeans rack and try on a pair to see what size you need. So you come out of the dressing room and say, "These fit me."

Mom nearly falls out. She says the jeans are so tight that she does not know how you ever got into them.

So your mother precedes to give you another pair of jeans. So you stomp into the bathroom to try them on and they fit so you go over to the rack to pick out a few pair.

About that time you come around with a pair of $50 dollar jeans and she says, "There is no way I am buying those jeans for you!"

You say, "But Mom all of the other kids are going to be wearing them!"

Yeah, But you're not all of the other kids," she protests and leaves it at that.

So you leave the store and head home because your mother is tired of kids and her nerves are shot. So she leaves the school shopping to be done another day.

There's A New Symbol Of Power In The Country

Everyone feels the squeeze when bill paying time rolls around, and Lamar Electric Cooperative is no exception.

But through the efforts of Lamar Electric Cooperative and its generation and transmission cooperative, Rayburn Electric, efforts are being put forth to hold electric bills down. And when the cooperative is able to trim its wholesale power bill, those savings are passed along to its members.

"Because of concern for our members, six area cooperatives have joined hands through the leadership of Rayburn Electric Cooperative to help reduce those power costs," says Charles Christian, member services manager of Lamar Electric.

The six electric cooperatives that form Rayburn Electric are Fannin Electric in Bonham, Kaufman Electric in Kaufman, FEC Electric in Greenville, Grayson-Collin Electric in Van Alstyne, New Era Electric in Athens and Lamar Electric in Paris.

The electric utility business is a very complex business, especially in the area of power supply. That is the reason for the creation and existence of Rayburn Electric, a generation and transmission cooperative headquartered in Rockwall.

Rayburn Electric currently makes bulk power purchases for the member cooperatives from TU Electric and other power suppliers. It has also begun long-term planning to explore alternate electric power sources which are more reliable and cost-conscious.

Rayburn Electric has been involved as an intervenor in TU Electric's filing before the Texas Public Utilities Commission for a $442 million rate increase.

"As a result of this new thrust, which was brought about as a matter of survival due to spiraling wholesale electric rates, we wanted something to commonly identify us," according to Harold Faulkner, general manager of Lamar Electric.

"We hope our members will become familiar with this logo and its six lightning bolts, as being representatives of the six Northeast and North Central Texas electric cooperatives providing reliable, affordable power to approximately 200,000 people in the 16-county area."

THERE'S A NEW SYMBOL OF POWER IN THE COUNTRY

Electric power supply has become a complex issue in the last two decades and it takes innovative ideas to deliver the most reliable service at the lowest price possible. That's why Rayburn Electric was formed. While you might not know what Rayburn Electric is, you know who we are—Fannin EC in Bonham, FEC in Greenville, Grayson-Collin EC in Van Alstyne, Kaufman EC in Kaufman, Lamar EC in Paris and New Era EC in Athens.

While these six member-owned utilities have been providing reliable electric service for over 50 years; they realized several years ago that decisive actions were needed to meet the problem of rising electric costs from their present supplier, TU Electric. Deciding that the strength of one large system was greater than that of six individual cooperatives, they formed Rayburn Electric for the purpose of bulk power purchasing and long-term planning.

Meeting the power needs of 200,000 people in Northeast and North Central Texas, Rayburn Electric is committed to an aggressive policy of exploring new cost-conscious energy alternatives. There are exciting developments coming to ensure our consumers that they will have the reliable service they've come to expect without the rapidly-escalating rates that appear imminent for much of this region of the state.

You'll be hearing a lot about our plans in the months to come. And you'll be seeing our logo (shown above) with the six lightning bolts representing the member utilities of Rayburn Electric. This symbol will be appearing on the vehicles and property of Rayburn Electric and its member cooperatives. And we hope you will come to recognize it as the new symbol of power for the consumers of our region.

Managing Beef Herds With Limited Forage

By Paul D. Payne
 CEA-AG

Who would believe that there would be a grass shortage in the area after the flooding problem in May? But that is exactly the situation now on area farms and ranches.

Hay yields have been running from 30 to 50 percent of normal this summer with the prospects of another cutting not too promising at the present time. However, the picture could change dramatically with additional rainfall this week or next. There is plenty of time remaining to get an additional one or two cuttings, but having adequate rainfall is the limiting factor.

Grass meadows will need additional fertilizer if they are to produce a quantity of quality hay. Being smart or lucky enough to apply the fertilizer to the grass just prior to a rain is the key since a considerable quantity of the nitrogen can be lost where rainfall does not move the fertilizer into the soil. This is particularly true of urea fertilizers as they volatilize much more quickly.

Milk supplies less than half of the nutrients needed by a calf to gain rapidly after it is three to four months of age according to Dr. Randall Grooms, Livestock Specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service. If the pasture that is available to the calves is not adequate, then one can expect to take lighter calves to the market.

Creep feeds to supplement pasture to meet these additional requirements are not economical under all conditions, but producers with a grass shortage this summer should take a close look at creep feeding. Kansas State University reported in a review of 31 university trials that calves gained 0.38 pound faster daily an required an average of 9 pounds of creep feed for an extra pound of gain.

The inefficient feed conversions for creep rations is due to calves substituting g creep feed for forage when pastures are good and because calves often fatten when creeps are full fed. So it would seem that creep feeding would be more economical at this time of year.

An approach to improve the efficiency and profitability of creep feeding is to limit feed creep rations. A high protein creep (34 to 44%) has been used in many studies and limited to about 1.0 pound per pound of extra grain.

So, if you are getting short on grass, you might want to take a second look at creep feeding your calves.
