NEW CONSERVATION PRACTICE FOR CALLAHAN COUNTY

BAIRD — A new Conservation Practice is being offered to Callahan County farmers. It is minimum tillage often called No-Till or Muleh Tillage.

Minimum tillage really works while saving the farmer time and money. Minimum tillage is the practice of planting seed directly into a cover of residues from the previous crop. In one trip across the field, the farmer prepares the seedbed, plants the crop and applies the fertilizer.

This operation and perhaps one cultivation is the only farming operation for the entire year. Farmers not familiar with minimum tillage farming, ask, "What make minimum tillage work?" The secret is an effective contact herbicide mixed with a residual herbicide to kill existing vegetation, so that the newly developing crop does not have to compete with weeds for nutrients and moisture.

Leaving a good soil cover will almost eliminate any wind and water erosion. Moisture is not worked out of the soil. Good covers can withstand sudden rainfall up to four inches without undue washing and conserve moisture by presenting run off.

According to Gary Gregory, Soil Conservationist at Baird, by eliminating 6 to 20 trips across the field as often required by conventional methods, the soil structure can be expected to improve through the use of minimum tillage. This results in reduced compaction and increased percolation of water into the soil where it is stored for future crop use.

For additional information on minimum tillage, contact your local Soil Conservation Service.
