HARVESTING SEASON NOW IN FULL SWING

The harvesting season is in full swing this week, the hum of the reapers and the combines are heard in every direction and the yield is turning out very satisfactory to the farmers.

Larry Blakley started his combine Monday, but owing to the heavy dew, in the mornings, he has not been able to cut only in the afternoon. He is cutting oats, which is avering about seventy bushels to the acre. He has something like 200 acres in oats, barley and wheat.

A heavy rain fell Wednesday night which prevented the combine running yesterday, but he thought it would be dry enough to begin combining again today.

Mrs. J. O. Hall, Ed Horn, Buster George, Harry Alder and perhaps others are also combining their grain crops.

Louis Watters, of Moran, was in Baird Wednesday getting binder supplies at B. L. Boydston's. Mr. Watters says you can always get just what you want at B. L. Boydston's, and at a saving on the price, too.

GRIGGS HOSPITAL NEWS

Mildred Tweed, two year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. S. Tweed, of Fort Worth, was a patient for three days the first of the week, suffering from severe bruised sustained when she fell from the family car as they were traveling along the highway last Sunday.

J. M. Mayes, of Admiral, was a patient last Saturday. He suffered a fractured ankle in a fall on the side walk; the injured limb was placed in a plaster of paris cast.

M. B. Nichols was a patient Monday, suffering with a fractured forearm, sustained in a fall from a disk pole.

Sam Dupree, 20, a deaf mute, who sustained a painfully injured foot in a fall from a train in the railroad yards here, was a patient for several days the past week. Dupree is a graduate of the Methodist Orphanage in Columbus, Ga., his home.

Mrs. C. D. Moore, living south of Clyde, entered the hospital Tuesday for examination and treatment preparatory for an operation, which she will probably undergo Saturday.

Dupree Slough, 10 years old son of Barly Slough, of Oplin, was a patient Tuesday, suffering from a fractured forearm.

Mrs. Homer Price, who underwent a major operation some two weeks ago has recovered sufficiently to be removed to the home of her aunt, Mrs. J. W. Brown, where she will stay for a week or so before returning to her home on the Dyer ranch, northwest of Clyde.

Mrs. Jesse James, who underwent a major operation some two weeks ago is improving.

A. F. Davis, night foreman at the Texas and Pacific round-house slipped and fell in a pit at the round-house yesterday morning, dislocating his shoulder and sustaining severe bruises, was a patient for the day.

Miss Haley took pictures of the exhibit and gave demonstrations on salads and salad dressing. The Club adjourned to meet with Mrs. Cole Jackson, June 16th.

Little Child Falls From Speeding Car

Little Mildred Tweed, two years old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. S. Tweed, of Fort Worth, was severely injured Sunday afternoon when she fell from a car on the highway east of the city. The family were enroute to Abilene and driving at high speed when the little child in playing with the catch on the door, released it letting the door fly open and throwing her out on the paving, she rolled down the embankment sustaining severe bruises.

The injured child was hurried to the Griggs hospital, where her injuries were dressed, and where she remained until Wednesday.

Zero Hour Near For The Cotton Farmer

Editor of The Baird Star:
On yesterday, June 1st, the clock struck midnight on the cotton market of the world. This was surplus cotton selling, none of the new crop is on the market. At the same time private estimates of this year's crop shows acreage reduction only 7 per cent below last year's acreage which produced 17,000,000 bales. No wonder the slump.

The holding of cotton by the different bodied cannot do any good, unless contemporaneous therewith, the production is reduced sufficiently to insure a crop less than the amount of consumption. This can only be done as was done with oil, by the strong arm of the law.

When the new crop is put on the market this fall and sold together with a 14,000,000 bale surplus, the clock will strike zero, and what the price will be is known to God and God alone. The misery that will follow will exceed the misery that followed the Civil war. During the Civil war the South was a solid South and she will have to be a solid South again with uniform laws from all the cotton-producing States, limiting productions as it was done with oil.

Let the farmers do the best they can with the worst possible conditions on earth, let them stand by their guns loaded with ballots and compel the enactment of laws for the protection of cotton such as were enacted for the protection of oil. When this is done cotton will slowly rise. The South will return to her former prosperity and all of the different lines of business dependent upon cotton will likewise prosper.

John H. Hill House Destroyed By Fire

The residence of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Hill, in west Baird, with all furniture, etc., was destroyed by fire about 8:30 o'clock Wednesday night. The fire was discovered by neighbors who turned in the alarm and the fire boys made a good run, but the fire, which was fanned by a high wind from the north-east, had spread the blaze rapidly through the building and it was impossible to save the furniture or building.

No one was at home at the time, and the origin of the fire is no known. Mrs. Hill was visiting in Putnam, and Mr. Hill was at the home of his mother, some blocks away.

It was fortunate that the wind was not in the west, or south-west as the residence of Haynie Gilliland was only about thirty feet away and just east of this house is the residence of Jack Flores, a large house. Had the fire gone that way it would have been a most destructive fire, but the fire boys kept the fire confined to the Hill residence. We understand Mr. Hill carried some insurance on both the house and furniture.

To The Baird Fire Boys
We wish to express to you our sincere thanks for your splendid work in saving our home from being destroyed by fire Wednesday night, when the Hill residence burned.
Mr. and Mrs. Haynie Gilliland.

The June term of District Court for the 42nd Judicial District convened Monday morning with Judge M. S. Long, district judge, presiding; Judge J. R. Black, District Attorney; Mrs. Callie Marshall, District Clerk and Sheriff R. L. Edwards were in attendance.

The following named gentlemen were empaneled as grand jurors, for the term: W. E. Melton, E. L. Gaines, T. A. Butler, W. R. Thompson, L. M. Farmer, Lester Smedley, B. C. Chrisman, E. N. Woods, R. H. Brock, Lee Coats, Kirby Meyers, R. C. Clemmer.

The grand jury had returned six indictments in a report made to Judge Long Tuesday afternoon.

Judge Long adjourned the court Tuesday evening for the remainder of the week as he was to preside in the 104th district court at Abilene, in the "tunnel job" which trial began Wednesday. The grand jury was recessed and will re-convene Monday and the petit jury summoned for Monday, has been ordered to report on Wednesday, June 15th.

Among other cases under investigation by the grand jury is the case of an apparent attempt to poison the family of Kirby Meyers, who live on a farm two miles south-east of Dudley, which occurred on the morning of May 29th. The Meyer family had just returned home from a visit with Mr. Meyers father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Meyers in Baird. Edgar Crawford, of Stanton, a brother of Mrs. Meyer, was visiting with them. In Washington This Week

Washington, D. C. (Autocaster)—with the political conventions getting closer and closer, the two big questions which everybody is asking and nobody knows the answers to are:

First, what is the Republican National Convention going to do about prohibition?

Second, who are the Democrats going to nominate for President?

The first question is important, because it is the only question on which anybody can stir up any semblance of a controversy in the Republican Convention. Mr. Hoover's renomination is definitely assured, with the likelihood is that Mr. Curtis will also be renominated for the Vice-Presidency.

Therefore, the only thing that it seems possible to start a quarrel over in the convention is the prohibition plank in the platform.

These things can be set down as definite:

First, there will be a prohibition plank.

Second, it will be a plank which will open the door for action by the next Congress looking toward a constitutional amendment superseding the Eighteenth or Prohibition Amendment.

Whether this plank will call for a popular referendum, or will pledge the party to the submission of a new constitutional amendment through the usual channels, for ratification by state Legislatures or conventions, whether it will promise a liberalization of the Volstead Act, or how it will open up the subject of prohibition, is still undeterminable. President Hoover has been in conference with dry leaders and wet leaders of all shades of opinion. Very careful political efforts will be made to avoid alienating the so-called "moderate" dry. Also, there will be pussyfooting in the convention to avoid offending the wets.

How important the prohibition question seems right now is indicated by the fact that many leading dries have been trying to organize a third party and that so eminent and able a statesman as Senator Borah of Idaho has been taking part in these conferences, until Washington gossip has it that Borah may run for President on a third party ticket, if neither the Republicans nor the Democratic convention adopts a prohibition plank which is satisfactory to these dry leaders.

Just the bare threat of a third party in the field sends politicians of both of the old parties into conniption fits. The Republicans are afraid that a third party would draw voters from its candidates, and the Democrats are equal afraid that a Prohibition party with Borah at the head would steal a lot of ordinarily Democratic states in the election. Senator Borah undoubtedly knows this, and it would be surprising if he did not use that knowledge to exert a very strong influence in the framing of the Republican prohibition plank.

It almost goes without saying that the Democratic party, whose convention comes two weeks later than the Republican, will try to be a little more wet than the Republicans, without being so wet as to alarm the dry states of the South, which happen to be also the normally Democratic states. That, at least, would be the natural thing for the Democrats to do, in order to gain whatever party advantages there may be in "wet" support. There is a suggestion, however that leaders of both parties may agree upon an identical plank. None of the political leaders wants to get into a prohibition fight. If both parties made exactly the same declaration on the subject, there couldn't be any fight and the campaign would be devoted entirely to actual issues of candidates an economic principles.

"Al" Smith's strength as a party leader is becoming more apparent from day to day. Reports from the country at large indicate that Speaker Garner's prestige is not quite so great as it was. If and when Governor Roosevelt is beaten for the nomination which is the principal aim now of a large but scattering group of Democratic politicians, it seems more and more likely that ex-Governor Smith will name the candidate. In that case it will not be Mr. Garner. It will not be Owen D. Young because he has taken himself out of the contest. It might be Newton D. Baker, but then again it might be another Ohioan, Governor George White.

Governor White will come into the convention with the solid Ohio delegation behind him. He is not widely known outside of Ohio, but his record is good, his ability is said to be very great, not only as an administrator, but as a vote-getter; he is the Democratic Governor of a state which has gone Republican oftener than it has gone Democratic, and he might turn out to be the dark horse at the Chicago convention.

Nobody known, but it is all very interesting speculation.

The Drivers' License Law

At this time, while aspirants for legislative position are announcing their candidacies over the state, persons interested in securing passage of a drivers' license law in Texas should make their influence felt.

If candidates are now impressed with the fact that a large and healthy sentiment exists for the passage of such a law, the battle for it will be won before the new legislature convenes.

Since the city legislators have lined up for the proposal almost unanimously of education should aim to convince the rural people, and their representatives, of the need of the law.

Automobile fatalities are mounting to appalling figures. We think of our losses in the world war as tragic we think it brought us a tremendous toll in broken families, and in sorrowed hearts, yet the human wreckage from automobiles fatalities is now constantly as great, month by month as was the average from war casualties during war time.

Insurance companies tell us that while 52,510 American soldiers were fatally injured during the 18 months we were in the world war, 53,000 American people were fatally injured in automobile accidents in the 18 months from July, 1930, to December 31, 1931.

Seriously injured during the 18 months of the war were 182,000 men, while in the same 18 months ended with December 31, 1931, more than a million and a half American residents were seriously injured in automobile accidents.

The human sorrow and economic loss was just as great for each man killed by accident in this country as it was for the man killed at the front in France.

Suppose we had to pension the dependants of the victims of automobile crashes; suppose we had to pay for hospital expenses; suppose we had to provide a living for the disabled, as we do in case of victims of the world war; obviously the nation could do little else than care for this army of unfortunates.

In the face of such appalling disaster and loss, certainly some remedial measures should be attempted. The one most highly recommended by students of the traffic problem is the drivers license law. It has brought immediate and continuing improvement in the nine states where tried. There can be little doubt that it will bring marked improvement in Texas if given a trial—"improvement" which means the preservation of life and limb for many thousands.

The rural sections should have a special interest in the attempt, because statistics show that the most rapid increase in automobile fatalities is in country districts. Traffic regulation in cities is cutting down on accidents, but the toll in the country is growing steadily higher.

The greater speed which drivers permit themselves in rural districts, the general absence of enforcement officers, adds to the danger.

The drivers' license law will give us more cautious drivers generally, and will give the rural enforcement office greater effectiveness in combating the law violator.

As a matter of fact, representatives from the rural sections should be taking the lead in the campaign for the law.

The examination fee required will be nominal, not more than 50 cents for a three-year term and possibly not more than 25 cents. This point is being misrepresented by certain opponents of the measure at this time, so are facts in the case should be kept clearly in mind.

The drivers' law can hardly be a major issue of the coming campaign, or a major problem at the next session of the legislature, but for that very reason friends of the law should do their work for it now. They should see that legislative candidates are committed to it.

Hornsby Family Move Back To Farm

The closing of last term of the Baird Public School also marked the closing of the Hornsby home near the school building—the family have moved back to the farm fifteen miles south of Baird.

In the fall of 1913, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Hornsby built a little home near the school building and moved to Baird to send their son, Horton, then only a child, to school; he entering the primary grade and a year or so later, another son, Alton, was born to the Hornsby's.

Horton Hornsby went through the Grammar and High school, graduating with the 1921 class and for some years worked as clerk in the post office, later with B. L. Boydston, who was then engaged in the general mercantile business, but who for the past several years has been with the T. & P. Ry store department and now with his wife and little daughter make their home in Fort Worth.

By the time Horton was in High School the younger brother, Alton was old enough to enter school and the closing of the past term found him a member of the graduating class—he like his older brother, Horton having commenced and finished his course in the Baird public school under Mr. J. F. Boren, who has completed his eighteenth year as Superintendent of the Baird Public School and having served two years previously as principal of the school.

For the past ten or twelve years, Miss Sue Hornsby and her brother, Allen Hornsby have lived here with their nephews, who were in school while the parents lived on the farm, but last week the little home where so many happy school days were spent, was closed up and the family moved back to the farm where Alton will help with the farm work this summer coming in week-ends to look after his radio repair work.

Mr. Hornsby says he has traveled many miles to and from Baird since moving his family here eighteen years ago. He says he averaged 100 trips a year to Baird, first traveling the fifteen miles to town and back in a buggy or wagon, and sometimes horse-back, then later in a car or truck—a total of 300 miles a year, of 54,000 miles in the eighteen years.

The Hornsby family came from Tennessee in 1886 and lived in Lamar county, until 1889, when they came to Callahan county and the next year bought the farm where they now live, and which they have continuously improved, until they now have a splendid farm, where they grow all kinds of crops, fruit and vegetables.

OLD COWBOYS DISAPPEARING FROM TEXAS

The old type of pioneer is rapidly passing and with them many picturesque characters widely known throughout Texas in days gone by. These staunch old citizens had ideas of their own, individuality and person resourcefulness that would put to shame many of the younger generation, yet their drawingroom manners probably would not pass muster.

Among the picturesque classes was the real old-fashioned type of Texas cowboy a man who feared nothing from the devil to a bucking broncho or a rattle snake, who rode the range and subsisted on rough fare, slept in the open with the sky for a blanket and the prairie grass for a mattress while the coyotes furnished a soothing lullaby to induce sound sleep.

The scattered remains of Texas' real cowboys will gather in annual reunion at Stamford on July 4-5-6 and have a big celebration the third such reunion to be held there in successive years. There will be an old fiddlers contest, with cash prizes offered; cowboys' square dance rodeo and roping contest, selection of the most typical cowboy under 55 years and the one over 55, and the selection of the most attractive girl sponsor from surrounding cities, all this together with a big daily parade.

We Have All Helped to Make ELECTRICITY your most inexpensive servant

The West Texas Utilities Company strives constantly to provide electric service more economically. That's one reason why your electricity is so inexpensive today.

There is another reason. With the rate schedule arranged so that the unit price is less with each additional use, our customers have reduced their own average rates by applying electricity to more and more of their household tasks.

This working arrangement between customer and company makes electric service constantly more useful and constantly lower in cost. As you make fuller use of the service, your rate is always going down.

MAN MADE THE TOWN

by RUBY M. AYRES

TWELFTH INSTALMENT

Diana, a young English girl, in love with Dennis Waterman, a married man, undergoes a nervous collapse and is sent to the country to recuperate under the care of Dr. Donald Rathbone, who lives near the cottage where she stays. She finds herself falling in love with the doctor, but still trying to hold Dennis' affection. Linda, Dennis' wife, tells her that she offered Dennis a divorce but he would not accept it; he would have felt compelled to marry Diana. Diana's love for Doctor Rathbone is tempered by jealousy of a woman named Rosalie, who lives in the doctor's house. At last Rathbone finds that he is deeply in love with Diana, but he confesses to her that Rosalie is his wife.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

"I was terribly sorry for her, too, and perhaps—flattered that she should think anything of me, but I did not love her, Diana, and we were just friends until . . . until I got an appointment broad. When I told her about it she . . . it was the first time anything really definite was spoken between us. Perhaps I wasn't very brave, or perhaps I didn't really care for her sufficiently well, but I tried to show her how impossible it was—that I could not . . . There is no need to tell you every detail, and God knows I am not blaming her any more than I blame myself, but without my knowledge she told her husband that she cared for me, and she asked him to divorce her . . . He refused. I have often wondered why, seeing how he had always neglected her . . . Then, after a short time, she left him. Diana—if you knew how hard it is for me to tell you this—"

He broke off agitatedly, but Diana did not speak, and after a moment he went on again:
"In the end . . . in the end . . . I agreed to take her away. We thought it would force her husband to divorce her . . . She was so different in those days, gay and reckless, never counting the cost of anything—only living for the moment . . . Then—the night before we were to have gone she was nearly killed in a motor accident. She was driving her own car, and she was alone . . . She was unconscious for days, and when she recovered . . . she was as she is now—like a child. She recognized me, as she still recognizes me, but only as an affectionate child might, and that it all. The rest, everything that has happened in her life, is gone from her."

"I paid a visit to see her husband—she had nobody else who cared or who could have looked after her—and I remember that he laughed in my face. He was a much older man than I, and he said to me, 'Well, you've begun to pay already, Rathbone, and you'll go on paying for the rest of your life!' . . . It seems that he was right . . . I brought her down here to my house, and Mrs. Farmer came to look after her. Two years later her husband died. . . and I married her, Diana. You see, I'd always promised her that if she was ever free I would. I gave my word, and I felt that I must keep it. There was always a thought at the back of my mind that perhaps some day she might get better—and know! I didn't tell anybody—it wasn't anybody's else's business, so she's still always Miss Rosalie to Mrs. Farmer and Hobson—and to the rest of the household. But she is my wife, Diana though I—we—we've never lived together as man and wife."

"That's all . . . Perhaps I was stupidly quixotic, but I was—fond of her, and besides . . . I had given my word. She's like a gentle affectionate child—always happy—asking nothing except that people are kind to her. She made very little difference to my life one way or the other till—I met you, and then I realized what I had done. . . . Even then I thought it only meant that I should be the one to go on—suffering. You seemed so much younger than I feel—I never imagined you might—might grow to care for me, and when I realized that perhaps—quite unconsciously—you . . . had, I tried my best—a poor best, I can see now—to keep you from realizing the truth. I don't think you will ever know what it meant to me . . . how I . . . when Nero hurt you, and afterwards, when you . . . when you asked me to tell you not to go away with Waterman. I could have borne it for myself, but to know you were unhappy—perplexed . . . that you didn't understand why I should seem so . . . unkind . . ."

"What else is there for me to do, Diana?"
"I could see you sometimes—couldn't I? . . . Not very often if you didn't want to—but just . . . SOMETIMES! . . . I wouldn't care what people said if you didn't. I'll do anything—ANYTHING you want me to do, if only it doesn't mean I shall never see you any more . . . We could just go on—being friends."
"Do you think we COULD—just go on being friends, Diana?"
She struggled for words in which she could best express herself. "It seems to me that it wouldn't be such a great—wickedness if you and I lived together, even if we never can be married. Don't think all the wrong things about me for saying that. I know quite well what I'm saying. It wouldn't be like going away with Dennis—that was just a sort of bravado—defiance—to try and forget you. I'd made up my mind to drink lots of champagne to-night just so I should not care, but if it had been you . . . I love you just as well every minute of the day as I do now. I shouldn't care if you never kissed me or made love to me at all, if I could just be with you. I've been so silly. You said that once that you didn't believe I'd ever met real love."
"I hadn't till you came, I must have been waiting for you. Can you understand that, too?"
"You make me very humble, Diana."
She leant forward a little, trying to see his face.
"And—will you?" she asked.
"Will I what my dear?"
"Let me live with you?"
Rathbone turned suddenly, groping for her through the dim light and taking her to him with the strength of despair.
"Let me kiss you—let me kiss you."
She put her arms around him, and their lips met and clung together in a first kiss that seemed as if it could never end; Diana could not think, could not reason; she was only conscious of the passionate joy he brought her, and when at last he let her go, she asked with a sob:
"And can you kiss me like that and still want to send me away?" For already she had realized the hopelessness of her appeal.
"I love you so terribly, Rathbone said, but it was no answer to her question.
Diana put up her hand and gently touched his face.
"Donald?"
"Yes, my heart?"
She caught her breath on a half sob.
"How lovely," she whispered. "No body has ever said a thing like that to me before."
"Like what, Diana?"
"My heart—isn't that what you called me?"
"You are my heart."
She leant her cheek against his shoulder, and his arm tightened a little, drawing her closer to him.
"You're such a child," he said with emotion.
She shook her head.
"I'm not—not any more. I think I grew up all in a moment, just now, when you kissed me."
"I ought not to have kissed you."
She laughed at that; she felt that at all costs she must not allow too great a sadness to come between them.
"Why not?" she asked. "Why not—if you love me?"
She turned round, lifting her face to his, "Kiss me again, Donald."
But he would not.
"We've got to face facts, Diana. We've got to realize that we can't go on meeting—like this. I'm not made of stone. We've got to make up our minds that the only possible thing is to say good-bye."
She gave a little cry.
"Don't do that, Diana. Don't cry, for God's sake . . . I can't stand it. I'm to blame for all this—I ought never to have done what I did to-night . . . You were right when you told me that I only just pretend righteousness."

CHAPTER XVIII

He stopped speaking, and Diana said faintly:
"You mean that . . . she—Rosalie . . ."
"Like sweet bells jangled—out of tune," Rathbone quoted grimly.

Diana closed her eyes.
There was a little silence; then she said again:
"Perhaps—some day—when we're both quite old—I shall wonder . . . if you have forgotten me. Do you think you will Donald?"
"I shall never cease to think of you—and love you."
"But you'll send me away from you . . . all the same. I know that's what you mean to do," she said with a cry of pain.
"What else is there for me to do, Diana?"
"I could see you sometimes—couldn't I? . . . Not very often if you didn't want to—but just . . . SOMETIMES! . . . I wouldn't care what people said if you didn't. I'll do anything—ANYTHING you want me to do, if only it doesn't mean I shall never see you any more . . . We could just go on—being friends."

He took his arm away from her, and with a great effort she checked her tears, though she sat forlorn and shivering without the shelter of his close embrace.

Then Rathbone said heavily:
She was silent for a moment; then she broke out:
"If I'm never going to see you any more—"
"I didn't say that, Diana."
"But you mean it, I know it's what you mean," she told him despairingly. She broke off to ask breathlessly after a moment: "I wonder what you think is to become of me?"
She would go back to London, she thought, tearfully, she would pay visits, and laugh and flirt, and stay up late, and get sick and weary and bored once again, with no hope of anything better to come.

She said with a last effort:
"If you would only promise me that some day I should see you again—and be with you. Can't I have anything to hope for? Don't you want to be with me too?"
"Every moment of all my life."
She said with a touch of her old obstinacy:
"If you really meant that, you wouldn't send me away. You've often talked to me about being happy."
"Now I've got the chance—a beautiful chance—you won't let me take it."
She was silent for a long moment; then she said wearily:
"Please take me home now."
Rathbone started the car without another word and drove silently back through the quiet lanes.

They were at the cottage gate now, and Rathbone stopped the engine.
Diana moistened her dry lips.
"I suppose this is—good-bye?" she said faintly.
Let us say good-night instead, Diana," Rathbone answered hoarsely. "In my heart you know I can never say good-bye to you."
She said with a sob: "I don't want to be only in your heart. I want to be with you in real life. I want to feel your arms round me—to kiss you."
He did not move for a moment; then, almost roughly, he took her in his arms again, holding her silently, not speaking at all, just holding her, till after a long time he turned her face up to his.

He kissed her many times—on her eyes, her throat, her hair, and then once again on her lips, before, very gently, he put her away.
She stood beside him at the gate, unable to speak, shaken to the depths of her being, her eyes raised to him in mute appeal; then suddenly she turned and fled up the little garden, sobbing as if her heart would break.

CHAPTER XIX
The following morning there was another letter from Mrs. Gladwyn telling Diana to get ready to return to London on Wednesday.
"Wednesday! That is very soon," the Creature said. "I shall miss you!"
"I shall miss you too," she said quietly. "But I suppose I shall have to go."
"By the way," she said as she left the table, "I can't find the frock you wore when you went away yesterday."
"No," Diana kept her eyes lowered. "I changed at my aunt's house and left it there. It doesn't matter."
It gave her a queer little feeling to realize that in all probability her carelessly packed suitcase was now in Dennis Waterman's possession, because of course he would have sent for it as they had arranged.
"And what are you going to do today?" Miss Starling asked. "I think it's going to be fine, by the look of it."
Diana glanced towards the window. "I think Mr. Waterman will be coming presently," she said.
Miss Starling said, "Oh—I see."
To Be Continued Next Week

Build No More Pyramids

We would like to see the Government of the United States, the Government of every state, every county and every town, start right off on a program of public improvements that will put a lot of people to work and put a lot of money into circulation. But we don't want to see that sort of work done if it just goes to sink taxpayers' money where it won't come back.

Among the greatest public works of all time are the Pyramids of Egypt. Under the direction of successive Pharaohs they gave employment to practically everybody in Egypt, but they consumed practically all of the money and resources of Egypt. And once all of that labor and money had been built into the pyramids, there wasn't any way of getting it out again and that is what ruined ancient Egypt.

We have built enough pyramids, in the form of non-productive public works, in America. We do not think the government, or any part of the government, ought to go into business but we can think of a lot of things, to in competition with private capital, build which it would be perfectly sound business for the government to borrow money, because eventually the money would come back to pay for those enterprises, and they are not the sort of thing toward which private capital has ever been greatly inclined. We have in mind such things as the building of toll bridges over rivers, of developing great water power sites like the Boulder Dam, which will pay for itself by the sale of power and of water rights for irrigation. We understand that the Washington Monument, although it was only partly built by government funds, more than pays for its upkeep by the fees charged for taking visitors to the top of it. We think the principles of democracy have been carried too far in assuming that whatever was paid for out of public funds should be free for the use of everybody who wants to use it.

By all means let Uncle Sam sell a billion or five billion dollars of bonds to get money for public works, provided it is not to be used for pyramids but for projects so safe-guarded that the money will come back with interest without putting an added burden upon the taxpayers.

Unfair
A witness handed the crowd a good laugh the other day in Los Angeles automobile court. It was an accident case and the prosecution was trying to pin down the witness to a statement of the actual distance between himself and the crash at the time it occurred. The witness was rather vague about it.
"I demand to know," thundered the lawyer, "whether you were ten feet away, or fifty, or one hundred?"
Finally the witness turned to His Honor with a look of anguish on his face.

"Oh, please," he begged. "I ask you, is this fair? I'm not a surveyor."

Nurse Cow Saved Colt
Walter A. Greenberg, Columbia county, Wisconsin, lost a mare last spring that had a young colt. Greenberg did not like the idea of having to hand-feed his colt, so he installed the foal in the dairy barn where he kept a large number of Holstein cows. After much work the colt was persuaded to get his meals from one of the cows.

This fact brought out information from Kentucky that many thoroughbred horsemen there are raising their foals on a nurse cow via the bucket route.—Prairie Farmer.

Ordered to Thrash Wife
As the result of a court clerk's error a divorce in Berlin, Germany, is suffering from the effects of a thrashing administered by her ex-husband, with court order. A few days after he had been divorced the man received official notice that he was to pay alimony, to enter her house, and to thrash her. He quickly complied by putting into effect the second and third parts of the order. Investigation disclosed that the order should have read to pay alimony, but not enter the house or thrash the woman.

Stokes by Push Button
One man, by merely pressing push buttons, stokes all the coal-burning boilers in a 47-story New York hotel. The boilers burn pulverized coal, and when a button is pushed exactly the right amount of coal to keep the fire at proper heat is automatically released from the bunkers of the fire box.

More Overproduction
Hinks—We are getting too many laws.
Jinks—Yeh! And the way divorced couples are remarrying I'd say too many in-laws, also.

DAD AND I

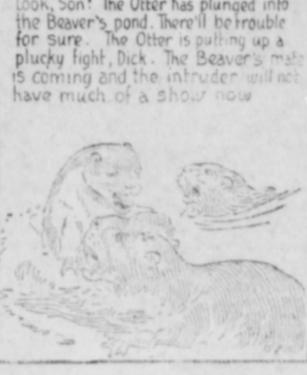

By Stafford

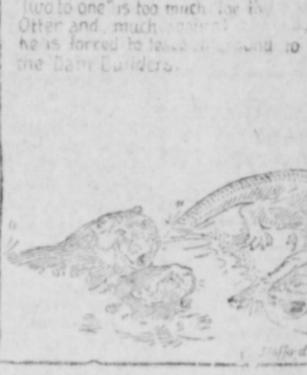

What is it? It's an Otter. He's a great swimmer and fisher. The Beaver and her two little ones are certainly watching him closely. The Indians say that the Otter and the Beaver will fight to a finish.

Little Beavers are born with their eyes open—not like kittens or puppies whose eyes are closed—and in about two or three weeks are able to swim. At first mother stays around to see that nothing happens. The baby Beavers, when tired of swimming, climb up on top of their house and doze in the sun.

Look, Son! The Otter has plunged into the Beaver's pond. There'll be trouble for sure. The Otter is pulling up a plucky fight, Dick. The Beaver's mate is coming and the intruder will not have much of a show now.

"Two to one" is too much for the Otter and, much against his will, he is forced to leave the pond to the Dam Builders.

When you advertise in a newspaper you are accepting an invitation to send your sales message into the homes of the community's best citizens. They have subscribed to the newspaper, they accept it as a welcome guest and have come to look upon advertising as an important and essential part of that newspaper.

"Shopping around the fireside has become an important routine in almost every family. At home with no distractions, in comfort and at peace with the world, the average American family is becoming more and more accustomed to do its shopping with the aid of the newspaper.

"For that reason, if for no other, honesty should be the guiding light in any advertising campaign or copy that is prepared. If your business has the reputation of implicit truth in advertising, if its sales message in its advertising can be relied upon to the lat word, if extravagant claims and boasts are lacking, and if you give the facts about your merchandise, YOU ARE BUILDING A FOUNDATION FOR SUCCESS THAT NOTHING CAN SHAKE."

Biscuits Ready-to-Bake

BISCUITS—ready for the oven, feather-light and with that flakiness that brands them as biscuits from the Old South—these are the packaged biscuits that even father can bake to perfection now.

They come in cylindrical fibre cartons, buttermilk biscuits, ten to each package and separated from one another by layers of tin foil. You buy them right from the refrigerator at your grocery or delicatessen store. You tuck them into your own refrigerator and take them out ten minutes before time to serve. They fairly pop out of the carton when you open it—fluffy and light, ready to bake a beautiful golden brown.

An Old Kentucky Recipe

There's a story there, you say. There is. And the story comes from Kentucky, where good biscuits and good old Kentucky hospitality come from. A baker of Bowling Green was the proud possessor of a superior old recipe for buttermilk biscuits. He believed people everywhere preferred good biscuits. He experimented with his formula for several years, until he had achieved a biscuit which would keep, under proper refrigeration, and which would be practicable for marketing.

He brought his biscuits to Louisville and started a bake-shop, on an obscure corner. The people of Louisville made a path to his door. Then a large flour mill, which supplied the flour for the biscuits arranged to take over the product, and produce it in quantity. Atlanta was the first test city. In six weeks sales leapt from 600 to 6,000 packages a day. In Indianapolis, the first northern city to try them, they proved even more popular.

Today enormous numbers of biscuits go direct from the mixing room to a fleet of refrigerated trucks and are thus serviced to markets everywhere.*
