This is a 15.8 per cent population loss for the county. County Judge Giles W. Dalby told The Dispatch yesterday after returning from a visit to Austin Tuesday that the Texas secretary of state's office reported that it is generally found that the 1970 census count was "about five per cent high in Texas "

If that yardstick was applied to the county, for example, Garza would have had a population of only 4,991 in 1970 instead of the 5,254 reported.

From the standpoint of minorities, the 1975 census came up with a total of 285 blacks representing 6.3 per cent of the county population and 816 Spanish-Americans representing 18.3 per cent for a total prity population of 24.6 per

The commissioners court worked all-day Monday in its effort to redistrict the county's four commissioners district equitably according to actual population.

The new boundary lines, when finally approved will be published in The Dispatch by map form for both city and Judge Dalby pointed out that the new districts will not become effective until the 1976 election year. Redistricting must be completed quickly to qualify the changes.

All members of the court expressed the opinion that the court had made a good redistricting start in trying to get the districts equal in actual population according to a federal court order.
