VA Quiz

Q - I am an ex-WAC, planning to attend school under the Korean GI Bill. My husband is working. Will VA pay me the added GI allowance for a veteran with dependents, even though he is working?

A - No. You could claim the added allowance for your husband only if he were in fact dependent upon you.

Q - As a member of the reserves, I receive pay for attending weekly meetings and going on active duty two weeks each year. Will this pay be deducted from the monthly allowance I receive as a student in college under the Korean GI Bill?

A - No. Reserve pay will not be deducted from your GI allowance. Neither will any other outside earnings you will receive. Under the law the monthly allowance for school-going veterans remains the same, regardless of outside income of any kind.

Q - I have a permanent GI insurance policy which lapsed several months ago. To reinstate, I understand I will have to pay all back premiums. Will I also be required to pay interest on the premiums?

A - Yes. You will be required to pay interest at the stipulated rate for your type of policy.

Q - I am thinking about paying the additional premium on my insurance policy, so that if I come totally disabled for months or more I will receive monthly payment from VA. If I should become disabled, would the payments I receive be deducted from the face amount of the policy?

A - No. Monthly payments total disability for which you are paying extra premiums do not decrease the face amount of GI insurance policy.

Q - I pay premiums on my insurance once each year, in advance. What would happen if my yearly advance payment?

A - The present value of your next month would be refunded your beneficiary.

Q - Could I receive VA out-of-pocket treatment for a non-service-connected disability?

A - No. Under law, out-of-pocket treatment is available only for the treatment of service-connected disabilities.
