Conservationist Offers Advice On Rangeland

The weather's part in grass production can change from pasture to pasture, with the climate, with the type of grass present, and with the level of grazing management.

The amount of rainfall and forage produced are closely related. Below normal rainfall leads to below normal grass production and loss of the most favored forage grasses and forbs. The greatest loss of favored grazing plants occurs after several years of below normal rainfall. However, this will also reduce forage yields and reduce the condition of the rangeland.

Most damage to plants during a drought is caused by grazing use. During low rainfall, grasses will be reduced regardless of stocking levels. But, once rain returns, grass produced on lightly grazed areas will be better than that from heavily or ungrazed areas.

On the Great Plains, reduced forage during drought conditions is generally caused by the intensity of grazing. Field studies have shown that light grazing is no more harmful than not grazing. The reason being the reduction of root growth after heavy use.

Grass leaves are the grazable part of a range plant. This plant factory produces nutrients for plant maintenance, more leaves, and seeds. Some nutrients are returned to the roots for storage and new top growth.

Healthy, vigorous plants produce more growth than they need. This surplus growth is what can be grazed. Most range plants need about half of this year's top growth to remain healthy, and productive. Small stunted plants will have small, stunted roots. Large, healthy plants will have large, healthy roots. A large, healthy root system will reach more water and nutrients. Healthy roots will produce a healthy plant which can outgrow unwanted weeds and grasses.

The Soil Conservation Service's guideline is: graze half and leave half of this year's growth. The purpose is to provide forage over several years time. Not overgrazing during years of normal rainfall will provide plants with good roots. Plants with good roots are better able to survive years of low rainfall. When normal rainfall returns, plants with good roots will be ready to produce plenty of good forage. Good roots are the foundation that grass will grow on. For more information on range condition and stocking rates, call 823-2320 or go by the Soil Conservation Service office in Silverton. Programs and assistance from the SCS-USDA are available to people of all ages regardless of socioeconomic level, race, color, sex, handicap or national origin.

Proper Deer Management Will Yield Good Harvest

Proper management and habitat structure will help reduce the impact of drought on a deer herd, according to a Texas A&M University Agricultural Extension Service wildlife specialist.

Besides habitat quality, deer herd dynamics also require a proper harvest management program to help them through drought periods, said Dr. Jack Payne, who is headquartered at Corpus Christi.

"Proper harvest management has many elements. It is necessary to have an idea of the density of deer, the buck-doe ratio and survival rate of the fawn crop. This information can be obtained by herd surveys before the hunting season and results can be used to set harvest quotas," Payne said.

He said a well managed herd has a density below the carrying capacity of the land, and acceptable buck-doe ratio (less than 1:3), and a good harvest program where adequate does are harvested and the bucks are not over-harvested.

"In this situation, the effects of drought will be less severe when adequate harvest management is practiced and high quality species of woody plants and vegetation, such as granjeno, colima, guaycan, persimmon, brazil, huisache and guajillo.

"Deer need woody cover for food, a cover screen and shade. The remaining range should have small open areas (less than 200 yards wide) interspersed with the woody cover. The openings should provide forb and weed production, since deer would rather eat weeds than brush or grass. During drought the forbs are usually lacking, however," Payne said.

The drought has reduced the food supply. Many Texas deer currently are eating the browse which they normally would use as food later in the summer, because the forbs that they usually eat in early summer are not present. Although deer may not look the deer numbers are under carrying capacity," Payne said.

Besides good harvest management, a harvest record keeping program is essential. Minimal records required are the age and sex of each animal, their individual weights, and a body condition score of good, average and poor, based on the amount of body fat," Payne said.

"For bucks, antler measurements should include the antler spread, number of points, length and circumference of beam," he said.

Records are important. With adequate records, a wildlife biologist can explain to ranchers the condition of a deer herd and evaluate the effects of various management practices on the deer, Payne said.

Quality habitat is an essential element of good harvest management, Payne said. Good deer habitat should have at least 50-60 percent of the land in woody cover. Wildlife need a diverse, stressed presently, they are reducing their late summer food resources which will spell trouble if the drought continues, Payne explained.

"Supplemental feeding can help the deer herd get through periods of drought stress. Most artificial feeding programs serve as baiting programs during the hunting season, and are scheduled following the dry summer months until winter begins. These programs do little to assist deer in times of stress," Payne says. Managers should be aware that a straight grain diet can lead to acidosis or toxic buildup and animal deaths.

People are always telling me I never stay at home, I'm never there when they come by or call. I never go anywhere! I'm always around. Being a mother of two in the summertime isn't easy, so I can be found (if I really am lost) at the grocery store, swimming pool, gas station, or at home in the kitchen.

I can only return calls in the mornings, because I receive my messages as the kids go to bed. That's when they remember to tell me. If I have one more person tell me "I need a real job" or "do you work?" I'm going to go into orbit! If I had any more free time, I'd have to hire a secretary to balance my schedule. In fact I actually met myself the other day going the other direction. I waved, I waved back at myself, and just kept going.

Well, the other day I decided to take some time off. If indeed I don't have a job, then what's the big deal? I couldn't lose a day's salary, because I don't work. My, my, my... you just can't imagine the stink that caused. I'm telling you, you working people out there, don't take a day off. Man, it's hardly worth it. And I didn't even take the whole day, I just took a half day... you guessed it, it was the second half. Hummm, I loved it, too. My family thought I'd deserted them for sure.

Now all I did was go shopping (birthday shopping, and not for me, either) and out to dinner before coming home. But what I didn't do was: the second load of laundry, mow the grass, clean the car, cook dinner, sit at the pool for three hours, get my article written, fold the first load of clothes, clean the market, work the checkbook up to date, or prepare an after-swim snack.

I don't have to tell you how I was shamed. I expected the wicked witch of the North to swoop down and pluck out my eyes or bite of my nose or something. But since none of these things happened, and as soon as the smoke clears, I've got a sneaking feeling I just might take a half day off again. Hey, why not... I don't have a job, and I don't work!

As summer progresses, many tree and shrub leaves are beginning to turn yellow and die. A common misconception is drought stress or chemical damage. However, most homeowners water their trees and shrubs and in most cases, there is no chemical damage occurrence.

Leaves that turn yellow, yet the veins of the leaves are still green, is the condition known as CHLOROSIS OF THE LEAF which is an iron deficiency in the tree or shrub. Maple trees are generally the first ones to show these symptoms of iron deficiency. To alleviate this problem, it may be controlled by using a liquid iron supplement by spraying it on the leaves this summer, then treating it with an iron sulfate powder around each tree in the fall and another spraying around bud break next spring. (Try to have a follow-up spraying each spring after that.)

Be careful when using this liquid iron as it stains sidewalks and driveways. For more information, contact the County Extension Agent at 823-2131, Ext. 13.

Caprock Comments

It finally rained a little in this dry and arid country below the Cap... not enough, but some. To do this, it had to make a complete turn-around in our normal weather pattern. It's what they call a tropical air mass, coming from the SE and traveling backwards. But however we got it, we needed it, and would be glad to have some more, even if it came from the South Pole. Don't know what's happened to the big cloud banks that used to make up in the Southwest, or Northwest, and came across the country soaking everything in its path... probably, the National Debt even scares the clouds away!

Used to look forward to the "Funny Papers" in the daily newspapers when they had such things as Andy Gump, Barney Google, Major Hoople, Freckles and His Friends, Ozark Ike, Li'l Abner, etc. But they changed over to detective stories, Buck Rogers, and a lot of other stuff which didn't appear funny at all, so I quit the comics. Am sorry that I did. They now appear to be coming back with "funny papers" again, and I'm out of sync with the new ones and probably missing something!

Sort of like the little boy, trying to explain his poor report card to his dad when he said "Dad, don't forget that we are studying a lot of new stuff this year!"

Filling station attendant to woman with a badly dented fender, "I don't know whether I should sell you any gasoline or not... it looks like you have had enough already!"

Short poem... "He finally got his hair trimmed; it wasn't dad and mom; it seemed that another guy asked him to the Senior Prom!"

Asked if he liked his new little sister, the little boy said, "Oh, she's alright, but there are a lot of things we needed worse!"

The old family Doctor was driving up to the house to deliver the ninth child, and almost ran over a duck.

"Is that your duck?" he asked. "Yes, it's ours, but it ain't no duck... it's a stork with his legs worn down!"

The father of a large family says the biggest generation gap he has is that one which he is trying to keep filled with groceries!

An old saying to young men is "Keep your eyes open before marriage; after that it doesn't matter much... you ain't goin' anywhere anyway!"

By the time you are successful enough to buy your wife clothes for a fancy figure, she no longer has one!

When it comes to picking up dirt... a vacuum cleaner can't even hold a light to a telephone!

The new bride met her husband at the door with a big smile and said: "Your dinner is going to be different tonight. A neighbor just told me that you need to add water to these dehydrated foods!"

A lady that takes in laundry while her husband is on the picket line is known as a person who "Irons while the strike is hot!"

That's -30- for this time, remember, a dollar doesn't go very far these days, but the speed it travels with is terrific!

Mrs. Lee Jay Browning

Graddy - Browning Vows Exchanged

Brenda Michelle Graddy of Canadian became the bride of Lee Jay Browning of Turkey in a 4 p.m. garden wedding, Saturday, June 18. The ceremony was held at the home of the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Browning.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Graddy of Canadian.

Vows were exchanged in a setting provided by a white lattice gazebo standing among the trees. Two large white grapevine heart-shaped wreaths entwined with peach and blue ribbons and flowers graced the gazebo, while two large baskets of peach and blue orchids stood at either side. Tubs of white petunia completed the setting, where the double-ring ceremony was performed by Elgin Conner, minister of the Quitaque Church of Christ.

Maid of honor was Bettie Lobough of Childress. Bridesmaids were Elizabeth Fuson of Canadian, Susan Furgason and Shannon Ervin, cousins of the bride, both of Pampa.

Rod Mullin of Euless was best man, and groomsmen were Tony Rich, brother-in-law of the groom, Troy Taylor, both of Turkey, and Michale Graddy, brother of the bride, of Canadian.

Mrs. Kathy Shorter of Flomtang sang "Through the Eyes of Love" and "You Are the Inspiration." Piano selections were "You and I" and the traditional wedding march played by Mrs. Patti Mullin of Turkey.

For her wedding, the bride chose a gown of white bridal satin and Chantilly lace. The fitted bodice featured an off-the-shoulder neckline with a lace ruffle all around. A wide band of lace ran down the center of the bodice to the basque waist, which had a ruffle of lace around it. Her elbow-length puff sleeves were trimmed with satin bows and lace edging, and the softly gathered floor length skirt had a band of lace and edging down the center. Satin bows caught up the skirt in front to make it tea length, and rows of lace ruffles peeped from under the bows catchings.

A double veil of illusion fell from her bandeau headpiece of organza mini-flowers, and pearl sprays to fingertips.

She carried a bouquet of her own design -- a cascade of white vanda orchids, blue freesia, peach baby's breath, lace and ribbons.

Bridesmaids wore dresses of peach eyelet with full tea-length skirts and fitted "sundress" bodices with bows at the straps and a ruffle at the waist. They carried white fans with blue and white flowers and lace bows and streamers.

RECEPTION

A reception following the ceremony was held in the home of the groom's parents. The bride's table was covered with a floor length peach cloth with white lace overlay, caught up at each end with two bows of peach moire taffeta to form a drape. The three-tiered cake was encircled by six small heart-shaped cakes and cherubs. A "Precious Moments" bride and groom topped the cake, which was served by Del Rich, sister of the groom. Peach was ladled from a crystal bowl by Christy Calvert, cousin of the groom.

The groom's table had a floor-length blue cloth, centered by a miniature white gazebo with a "Precious Moments" "with this ring" inside. Fruit and various hors d'oeuvres were served by Mrs. Dierenda Patton of Silverton, cousin of the groom.

Miss Amy Jones of Elk City, OK registered the guests. Lee and Michelle will make their home in Turkey.

The first fire fighting organization in America was started in Philadelphia.

TDPS Gives Tips For Holiday Drivers

The Fourth of July is one of the most highly celebrated of all holidays throughout the United States, and rightly so. This occasion should be remembered and should be celebrated because of the rights and the freedoms that each of us possesses.

We are also reminded this time each year that far too many will not have much to celebrate about in this great State of Texas. Major Vernon Cawthon, Regional Commander of the Texas Department of Public Safety, states, "At least 50% of all traffic deaths are alcohol related and during this holiday many people will celebrate by consuming alcoholic beverages, but we urge those that drink to plan their celebrations and to always have a sober driver behind the wheel of their automobiles, if the automobiles must be used. For everyone to remember, if you drink, don't drive; if you drive, don't drink. Become a responsible person, if you are going to drink, help us protect yourself as well as the other people on our states' streets and highways."

Cawthon added, "Remember to obey all traffic laws and to use that little piece of insurance that is lying right beside you... buckle that safety belt. It costs no money and only takes about two seconds to insure yourself. So, let us all have a happy and enjoyable holiday."

Crime Prevention (1978-1988). Thanks to Crime Dog McGruff, over 19 million Americans participate in block watch groups in 100,000 neighborhoods.
