FORD
The best news I have seen in the papers in a long time is the announcement that Henry Ford is about to start production on a new line of cars. Lots of people have been waiting to make up their minds what car to buy this spring until they see the new Ford. I think there is going to be a big rush for new cars of all makes as soon as the new Ford models are shown. Most of the cars now in use are pretty well shot, and now that the definite upswing in business and industry has begun, this ought to be the biggest year ever in the automobile business, for Ford and for everybody else who makes a good, low priced car.

WALLACE
The death of Edgar Wallace, most prolific writer of detective fiction, is a personal loss to hundreds of thousands of Americans who have been in the habit of reading every new Wallace book as soon as it came out. No writer ever lived who produced such immense volume of entertaining stories of such uniformly high quality. Wallace frequently worked on three or four books at once, dictating each to a different stenographer, and more than once wrote an entire full-sized novel in less than a week. He was never at a loss for a plot, and his characters carried the stamp of reality.

Edgar Wallace was a giant of a man, of apparently limitless physical energy, but even the strongest is not proof against pneumonia. There are many other good writers of first-rate detective stories, but none who has Wallace's energy and capacity for rapid work.

BUTLER
Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler has just celebrated his thirtieth anniversary as President of Columbia University in New York City. Under Dr. Butler's guidance Columbia has become the largest university in the world, with something like thirty thousand students and a staff of three thousand professors and instructors.

There are a good many people who think that Dr. Butler talks too much, but they are mainly folks who don't like what he says. There is no stauncher defender of the fundamental principles of democracy than he. And I do not know of anyone who had a sounder or more complete foundation of education to begin with, or who has made use of it, as Nicholas Murray Butler. His influence over thirty successive graduating classes of Columbia will live for generations. It is a great responsibility to try to guide the thinking of such a host of young people, but on the whole I think Dr. Butler has made a good job

SILVER
Now that the major financial problems of the nation are rapidly being cleared up, attention in Washington is focusing again on the monetary position of silver, of which I have spoken before in this column. Senator Pittman of Nevada has introduced a bill for the purchase by the government of five millions ounces of silver a month, to be paid for in silver certificates. That probably will not be done in just that way, but I know so many people in influential financial and political circles who believe that something must be done to restore silver to its money position, and who are working so hard and intelligently toward that end, that I believe we shall see something effective done about it before very long.

NAMES
Under the common law which prevails throughout most of the United States, a person's name is anything he or she chooses to make it after arriving at the age of independence. If I wanted to call myself Solomon Grundy and so announced, that would be my name. It would not be necessary for me to ask permission of any court or legislature, though I might get into trouble if I changed my name to evade the laws, civil or criminal. James Branch Cabell, famous American author, has just made the public announcement that his name is now simply Branch Cabell. Col. Frank Knox, publisher of the Chicago Daily News, just appointed head of the President's anti-hearing commission, was christened William Franklin Knox, but he prefers to be known as Frank Knox, and that is therefore his legal name.

Presidents of the United States have changed their names. Grover Cleveland was Stephen G. Cleveland as a young man, and Woodrow Wilson was Thomas W. Wilson. Herbert Clark Hoover, has changed his name to plain Herbert Hoover, with which he signs all official documents. during the war King George of England changed the surname of the royal family from Wettin to Windsor, and his cousins, the Battenbergs, are now the Mountbattens. Your name is whatever you call yourself.

Japan Rebuked by League Council, but Still Persistent — President Hoover Asks Congress for Reorganization of Government.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

JAPAN during the week seemed to be getting deeper and deeper into the morass of international trouble, but gave no outward sign of weakening in her determination to subdue the Chinese. Having received a report from its investigators at Shanghai, placing the onus of the hostilities on Japan, the council of the League of Nations got its dander up and sent to Tokyo a sharp note calling to Japan's attention again her obligations under various treaties and the league covenant, reminding her of her high position among the powers and appealing to her to cease the warfare against China. The decision to send this rebuke was reached in the absence of the Japanese and Chinese representatives and over the protest of Germany and Yugoslavia. It was signed by the "committee of twelve" and thus a loophole was provided in case it is not backed up by the league assembly later. The communication took the same stand taken by Secretary of State Stimson, that the validity of Japanese occupation of Chinese territory could not be recognized.

Mr. Stimson formulated another stern protest against the use of the international settlement in Shanghai by the Japanese as a base for military operations, and declined to be impressed by Japan's argument that the other powers also had landed troops there. He told Ambassador Debusch that if the Chinese should enter or fire on the settlement on any pretext while Japanese forces were utilizing it as a military base, the United States would hold Japan responsible.

In preparation for a grand offensive the Japanese heavily shelled the Chinese lines, and many shells fell in the international settlement. Two English sailors were killed. This caused great excitement in London. A special meeting of the cabinet was called at once and Prime Minister MacDonald left a nursing home to preside over it. American marines also were endangered by the rain of shells but there were no casualties among them.

AUTHORIZED by his government, the Japanese minister to China served an ultimatum on Gen. Tsi Ting-kai, commander of the Nineteenth Chinese route army, demanding that the Chinese retire twenty kilometers from Shanghai and threatening to drive them away by force should they not comply. There were evidences that the Japanese were growing anxious about the great concentration of Chinese troops and feared that Gen. Chiang Kai-shek would bring his national guard divisions to the aid of Shanghai's defenders and take command of the entire army. Minister of War Araki asked Emperor Hirohito to approve the cabinet's plan to send 30,000 to 45,000 fresh troops to Shanghai if the Chinese continued their resistance.

For the third time American Consul General Cunningham had to protest against a raid by Japanese plain clothes men on the middle school of the American Methodist Church, South. The furniture was smashed, books and papers scattered about, and an American flag nailed on the outer wall was torn down. Other Japanese civilians assaulted American Vice Consul Arthur Ringwalt and an American woman he was helping out of the bombarded district. For this outrage Tokyo apologized.

PRESIDENT HOOVER on Wednesday sent to congress a special message asking support for a reorganization of the government and recommending the creation of four new federal offices. He requested, simultaneously, the major alteration and changing in title of four other federal departments. Under the eight new and altered divisions he would consolidate present overlapping activities in an effort to subtract "millions of dollars annually" from the tax burden. Authority also was asked for the Chief Executive to transfer and consolidate executive and administrative groups merely through the issuance of executive orders, each to lie before congress for 90 days before becoming effective. Specifically, the President suggested:

1. Consolidation of the millions of dollars' worth of construction work undertaken annually by the various federal departments into a new office to be known as public works administrator.

2. Incorporation of the vast amount of personnel administration into one office headed by a "personnel administrator," with the civil service commission remaining in an advisory capacity to that agent.

3. Transfer of the administrative functions of running the American merchant marine to the Department of Commerce under direction of a new assistant secretary.

4. Creation of a new assistant secretaryship of interior in charge of "conservation," under whom would come reclamation work and the broad supervision of water power development.

5. Placement of all public health activities of the government under a new assistant secretary of the treasury.

6. Promotion of the commissioner of education to an assistant secretary of interior, with transfer of all educational undertakings to his care.

7. Promotion of the director of agricultural economics to an assistant secretary, and the designation of an existing aid to the secretary of agriculture as assistant secretary for agricultural research.

The immediate changes, Mr. Hoover asserted, would cost about $40,000 per annum in additional salaries, but "the saving in cost of administration would be many times this sum."

DEMOCRATIC leaders of the house prepared to place their own taxation and economy proposals before the nation as a means of balancing the national budget.

Following the declaration of Speaker Garner that President Hoover had failed to promote real economy, Representative Rainey of Illinois, Democratic leader, characterized the treasury tax proposals as "woefully insufficient."

The first step in the economy program was the creation of a special committee to study means of abolishing and restricting government bureaus to cut expenses.

The house ways and means committee met to consider the treasury's additional tax program, which included a 1-cent-a-gallon gasoline tax and a 7 per cent tax on domestic electric light and gas bills. Rainey said:

"The treasury originally recommended taxes totalling $920,000,000 and then admitted a mistake of over $400,000,000, and came back with a request to raise the total."

"The treasury, even in its new estimates, does not take into consideration expenses incident to the $500,000,000 reconstruction corporation, $125,000,000 land bank bill, possible direct relief funds of veterans' bills, and will not even estimate the increased interest on the national debt."

BY A vote of 35 to 48 the senate defeated the La Follette-Costigan bill to provide $750,000,000 from the federal treasury to the states for the relief of the jobless and needy, of which sum $375,000,000 was to be handed the states for highway building. Party lines were broken, and the "progressive" bloc was the only group that voted solidly for the measure. Sixteen regular Democrats and six regular Republicans joined with them in its support.

This being out of the way, the senate took up the Glass-Steagall bill to liberalize the federal reserve structure and release a fresh flood of credit throughout the national banking system. This measure had passed through the house with little trouble and it was expected the senate would soon give its approval.

IN SELECTING a successor to Oliver Wendell Holmes on the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States, President Hoover set aside geographical considerations and chose Benjamin Nathan Cardozo, chief justice of the New York state court of appeals. The nomination was sent to the senate and early confirmation was expected, though several protests were received by Senator Norris, chairman of the judiciary committee. This appointment gives the Supreme court five Republicans and four Democrats, and nine of the justices are from the eastern states. It had been expected that a westerner would be named. Judge Cardozo was recommended by various groups describing themselves as liberals, and his choice for the high honor was praised by senators of such diverse affiliations as Norris of Nebraska, Reed of Pennsylvania, Watson of Indiana and Wagner of New York.

PIERRE LAVAL, losing a vote of confidence in parliament, resigned as premier of France together with his cabinet. Paul Painleve, former premier, consented to try to form a new government.

SPEAKER JOHN N. GARNER'S western hat is still on his head but his friends have started his boon for the Presidential nomination by the Democratic national convention.

The Texas delegation and would have the support of countless other Democrats over the country when the nation knows more of his character and services.

"He has been speaker of the house for only a few weeks," said the Texas senators. "During that period the house under his leadership has attracted the attention of the whole country by reason of its prompt, thorough and statesmanlike conduct of its affairs. His record as speaker and leader is among the highest proofs of his splendid qualities of leadership and courage."

They recalled his twenty-nine years in the house as a representative from Texas as service "distinguished for its breadth of vision, its political courage and its rugged and aggressive democracy."

Mr. Garner said he had known nothing of the statement beforehand and had no authorized spokesman. He refused to talk of his Presidential chances.

JOBS for a million unemployed within thirty days is the highly laudable objective of a nation-wide campaign which the American Legion has started, in co-operation with the American Federation of Labor, the National Association of Advertisers and other organizations represented on the national employment commission. The entire movement is under the general direction of Henry L. Stevens, Jr., national commander of the American Legion. It has the support of President Hoover and countless other national leaders, and the drive is being aided by magazines and other publications commanding a total circulation of 35,000,000. Nearly sixty national radio advertisers agreed to contribute thirty seconds of their time on the air daily.

Committees in more than 7,000 towns and cities, supported by more than 10,000 posts of the American Legion and 30,000 unions affiliated with the A. F. of L. are co-operating in the campaign. That it will be successful is forecast by the report that nearly 25,000 jobs were obtained on the opening day of the drive.

OVER in Germany they are getting ready for an election, and Paul von Hindenburg, their grand old man, has yielded to the petitions of thousands of his countrymen and consented to be a candidate for re-election to the Presidency. His chief rival apparently will be Adolph Hitler, leader of the German Fascists.

Press reports said Premier Klaggess of Brunswick had appointed Hitler a professor of practical pedagogics at the University of Brunswick so that "the politician without a country" received German citizenship automatically. Hitler had lost his Austrian citizenship and could not run for President in Germany unless he became a German citizen.

TURKISH RUSHDI BEY, foreign minister of Turkey, seems to be one of the most optimistic of the delegates to the disarmament conference in Geneva. After the apparently irreconcilable views of the great powers had been presented the Turk arose and told the conference that the political importance of frontiers will soon be negated by fraternization among nations, which, he said, is the surest means of arriving at disarmament. Turkey, he said, has been aiming at understandings with her neighbor nations, but opposed any kind of alliances except one—an alliance among all nations against war.

He supported the French proposal for internationalizing civil aviation and urged prohibiting the manufacture of offensive weapons. Germany's proposals were submitted Thursday. They included abolition of all air armaments, destruction of air reserves of stocks, abolition of conscription, prohibition of heavy artillery and tanks, limitation of the size of warships and prohibition of aircraft carriers and submarines.

MRS. MINNIE MADDERN FISKE, for many years the foremost actress in America, died in Hollis, L. I., after three months' illness at the age of sixty-seven years. For half a century she had greatly entertained the people of the nation, and her passing was as greatly mourned.

Sir Edgar Speyer, who had been called "the man without a country," passed away in Berlin. At the beginning of the World war he was an eminent British financier and a privy councillor. Accused of treason and of being a friend of Germany, in which country he was born, he came to the United States, and later his British naturalization was revoked.

Washington, The Christian

The following paper was prepared and read by Mr. M. J. Holmes at the Baptist church Sunday, Feb. 21, the occasion being a service commemorating the 200th anniversary of George Washington's birth.—Editor.

WASHINGTON, THE CHRISTIAN

A people may well be judged by the characters and precepts of the men and women whom they honor as their national heroes. No person is totally bad who continually admires and honors the characters of those who have stood steadfastly for those high and noble principles woven into righteous laws and honorable traditions of a great nation.

A great government and an exalted civilization cannot come from precepts and examples of those who are not, themselves, possessed of worthy character, honor, and noble purpose. No government or people which has survived for centuries has ever failed in its laws and customs to reflect plainly the personal principle and characteristics of the pioneers who lived and wrought during their formative period. If men of noble character and honor led the people it is inevitable that these qualities will be the basis for the laws and customs of the future generations.

How could England ever cease to honor by her laws and traditions the memory and character of Queen Victoria, or of Gladstone? Could France ever abandon many of the traits which are regarded as typically French that originated during the times of Louis the XIV, Joan of Arc, and Napoleon?

It is plainly evident that out of the abstractions of the words and deeds and conversation of the past have come the concrete human laws and customs of the present. In fact, our civilization which we think is very up-to-date, is but the revision, largely of the thoughts and the reckonings of other generations. I believe that the words and deeds of each individual are so related to the whole race that it is possible that one act or word today may start an idea which may affect the future history of the world. It would be true then, of course, that our lives today may be what, they are because of an influence begun many generations ago. I am not referring to inherited traits from parents to children, but to that law of influence and environment which leaves its marks for good or evil on every person.

Imagine if you can what our beloved Texas would be today if, instead of the leaders we did have, Austin, Travis, Lamar, Houston, Crockett and the others, we had remained a part of Mexico under the heel of Santa Anna and had oppressed and exploited from his day to the end of the rule of Diaz. Or suppose such Americans as Benedict Arnold and Aaron Burr had had the power to accomplish their unscrupulous designs with the colonies during their formative period. Who can imagine the tyranny and chaos that would have reigned on this continent, and what misery the people would have suffered? Surely it was the hand of Providence that placed the scepter of power into other and safer hands. These hands guided by minds that revered their Creator, with eyes fixed steadfastly on the Star of Liberty, brought the colonists into the "Promised Land" of their dreams. And so, the history of America is the glorious heritage those hands handed down to us to keep unstained for ourselves and for those who shall come after us.

Every great era in the history of any cause or people has its great central figure. One whom the people trust and who the heart and the character and the personal magnetism to draw men to the cause he represents coupled with the wisdom to lead safely over the obstacles and through the difficulties such as those which confronted the American colonists.

Very great honor is due such patriots as Franklin, Patrick Henry, Jefferson, Monroe, and many others. All of these have glorified American history and exalted the cause of Liberty wherever there is oppression,—and there is glory enough for all. But I have wondered what would have been the trend of events without the steady hand and head and heart of Washington. Intellectually I think he was not superior to Jefferson or Franklin, yet he possessed in the highest degree that quality to lead which no other one possessed. When the colonies determined to dispute issues with England and establish a separate identity among the peoples of the world the demand that Washington should take the lead was spontaneous. His reluctance to accept the call and his humility when notified of it are characteristic of men who humbly trust a guiding providence in great decisions, acknowledging their inability to advance without such guidance.

In every emergency in which he was chosen to lead his acceptance was not made until careful self examination, earnestly seeking to know the Divine will. Even after many victories had been won he still insisted that he was unworthy of the confidence the people had in him, declaring that other leaders could lead more ably than himself. There seemed not a particle of vanity or self exaltation in him. This spirit is well illustrated upon his election as commander-in-chief of the American forces by the Continental Congress when he said: "I beg it may be remembered by every gentleman here that I this day declare with utmost sincerity, I do not think myself equal to the command I am honored with." These facts are given to illustrate how a real Christian acts when great decisions must be made. In subsequent addresses while occupying the Presidential office and in his immortal "Farewell address" we have many examples of his trust in Providence for guidance in America's struggle for independence.

In his first inaugural address after humble confession of his unfitness for the great duties of the Presidency he said: "It would be peculiarly improper to omit, in this first official act, my fervent supplications to that Almighty being who rules oevr the universe, who presides in the councils of nations, and whose Providential aids can supply every defect, that His benediction may consecrate to the liberties and happiness of the people of the United States a government instituted by themselves for these essential purposes, and may enable every instrument employed in its administration to execute, with success, the functions allotted to His charge." "In tendering this homage to the great author of every public and private good, I assure myself that it expresses your sentiment not less than my own."

"No people can be bound to acknowledge and adore the invisible hand which conducts the affairs of men more than the people of the United States." "Every step by which they have advanced to the character of an independent nation seems to have been distinguished by some token of Providential agency." "Persuaded that the propitious smiles of Heaven can never be expected on a nation that disregards the eternal rules of order and right which Heaven itself has ordained."

a form of government for the security of their union and the advancement of their happiness, so His Divine blessing may be equally conspicuous in the enlarged views, the temperate consultations, and the wise measures on which the success of this government must depend."

Such were the thoughts and principles expressed by Washington at his first inauguration when the results of the measures embodied in the constitution were yet to be tried. After having guided the ship of state as President through two terms he admonishes the people in his 'Farewell message' as follows:

"Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness,—these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and cherish them."

Washington was broad and liberal toward the sincere opinions of others. Regarding this subject of narrow intolerance which was quite common, even in America, in his day he said: "While we are contending for our own liberty we should be very cautious of violating the rights and consciences of others, ever considering that God alone is the judge of the hearts of men, and to Him only in this case they are answerable."

Thus the more one searches the character and actions of Washington the more we are convinced of his fervent spiritual trust and the surer we are of his faith in the glorious destiny for his country. A destiny in which he played a part so conspicuous in its beginning that we must be convinced that the hand of the Almighty was leading him and that what Moses was to the children of Israel as their chosen leader Washington was to the American colonies.

To The Good People Of Bairst

In order that we prove our gratefulness, the Council as well as myself tender thanks and full appreciation to you who so nobly assisted us where we needed help by paying your taxes thus enabling the City administration to pay all pressing debts when they fell due. We have accomplished the desired end and without your help it would have been impossible. It is our aim to keep up the good credit of Bairst and at the same time paying off old debts thereby reducing the indebtedness of the city. It will be of interest to all that up to date over $16,000 was paid on old debts, reducing the present indebtedness of the city. Economy is the watch word and if practiced, there is no reason in my mind why debts won't be paid and still further reduce the debts over the city.

You are entitled to our gratitude and I wish the world to know that Bairst has the best people on earth. Taking into consideration the depression existing, it is a remarkable record and we are proud of you.

Gratefully and sincerely,
H. SCHWARTZ, Mayor.

Announcement

Based upon my record of achievement in the field of elementary and secondary education I am offering myself as a candidate for re-election to the office of State Superintendent of Public Instruction. I am profoundly grateful for the support given me in the past and pledge that in this critical period I shall use my best efforts not only to maintain the present financial status of the schools but also to increase their efficiency. To this end I shall favor the following propositions:

- 1. The state ad valorem tax upon property should be reduced and other state sources of revenue should be substituted for the support of the schools.
2. The county board of trustees should be charged with more responsibility for the economical administration of the school funds of the county. This board should be authorized to purchase in quantity lots by competitive bids much of the equipment and supplies for the common school districts and for such independent districts as desire to accept such service.
3. Teachers should be paid promptly and not be required to discount their warrants. To this end such legislation should be enacted as would make the state per capita school fund available for the support of the public schools during the first three months of the term. Maintenance taxes would then become available and the strain upon local financial institutions would be relieved.
4. Laws relating to the certification of teachers should be repealed and the power to regulate the issuance of all teachers' certificates should be placed with the State Board of Education. This act should take effect

Sept. 1, 1933, and the validity and privilege of all outstanding certificates should be protected.

5. The State Department of Education should co-operate fully and completely with the State Board of Education in all of its efforts to improve the educational system of the state.

Did You Ever Stop To Think

By EDSON R. WAITE
Shawnee, Oklahoma

There should not be any ill feeling between the people of the cities and country. Without one the other would be hard put to get along.

Agriculture is just as much an industry as the smelting of iron or the manufacturing of goods. In fact, it is indeed the basis of all industries. Agriculture is concerned with what is necessary—the other branches of industry with what is useful. True, there is a difference in outlook between the farm workers and city workers, but this, like most differences of outlook, has been engendered by environment rather than by any fundamental antagonism.

The city worker lives in cities, although there is no reason why this should be an arbitrary condition of his employment, while the farm worker has the countryside as his inheritance. The one finds his amusement in the jostle of busy thoroughfares, hectic crowds and dazzling lights. On the other hand, the farmer's main enjoyment—unless he is a square peg in a round hole—is the sweet processes of nature. The behavior of given crops under differing conditions, the sweep of the storm on the soft green mouldings of pasture land, the birds of the woodland and the kiss of summer rains are his especial joys. But his industrial instincts are the same. Between the factory and the farm there is the great difference of exactness in time and measurement.

The city industry can estimate with work it can achieve in a given time mathematical precision the amount of with a given equipment and personnel. No such thing is possible on the farm. Those responsible for the production policy of the farm have to wait on the leasured processes of nature and cannot calculate without leaving a wide margin of uncertainty on account of the weather.

Under a law passed by the last Legislature, all county officials, including justices of the peace and constables are required to make an annual report to the comptroller's office of all fees collected during the year. Failure to do so by the first of March entails a $25 fine per day for each day after March first until said report is made.

Morning Thoughts
J. Marvin Nichols

Life's reverses enter into its final grandeur. Balconists say that in a far-off height the discordant sounds of earth blend in one vast harmony. Had we our own way, life's disappointments and failures would be left out of the final consummation. It all seems like one supreme travesty, now. An yet, these strange, mysterious things are all a part of a mighty fabric. We cannot see their necessity now. Some day, when our vision is undimmed and our sordid sense is not quite so dull, we shall know. At least, we shall know that these struggling tides are a part of life's majestic stream—the stream that forever rolls toward an appointed end.

Sometimes leading the simple life makes one entirely too simple.

Our estimates would be greatly changed once we judged a man not by what he does, but by what he would do if he had a real chance.

History is but the record of a few masterful spirits working in the midst of a mass of incompetent people.

For the man who needs no assistance there are scores to help, while the man most in need of help finds the greatest difficulty in securing what he really needs. Why this is so no human can ever tell.

A Brown County woman's ingenuity and energy resulted in her husband's wheat crop bringing $14 a bu. instead of anywhere from 25c to 40c. She steamed the wheat into a tasty breakfast food, canned it and received an average of $14 a bushel for all that she prepared in that way.

I am thinking of dear grandma, Whose gentle voice I best recall; With her loving arms around me, And my head upon her breast. Sunday with us was right good, a fine family came into our membership Sunday night by letter. Now, we are delighted to have these fine people with us and we urge others who live here and have their church membership elsewhere, to join with us here. We need you and you will find that it will help you to help us. Monday afternoon some 35 women met at the church with Mrs. Burnam Buckley and Camperre from Abilene, as guests and speakers and I say it was a fine time. If that group of women will come each Monday to the W. M. S. things will certainly move on.

We want to have two special services next Sunday, at the morning it will be a special service for parents. My message will be to the parents and I want the young people to help me put over a fine program and if they will be there in the service we can do it. The night service will be our special young people's and we are very solicitous that all of our young people be present and help in this service, and in this service I as expecting the older people to help me put it over.

CHRIST A SAVIOR, NOT A JUDGE

"If any man hear my words, and believe not, I JUDGE HIM NOT: for I came not to JUDGE the world, but to SAVE the world."

What was the Doctor's secret?

Man Made the Town

By Ruby Ayres

He was the grandest man in the world, young Dr. Rathbone. At least lively Diana Gladwyn thought so, as soon as she got over fretting about his exiling her to the country for a rest from the social round. Not, of course, that she was in love with him. She was in love with Dennis—dear, fascinating, selfish Dennis, who had married the wrong girl.

But Dr. Rathbone was "like a strong harbor," and he wasn't like the other men she knew. That was why he caught her attention. That was why she was desperately interested in discovering what Rosalie, the mysterious red-headed woman, meant to him.

Diana was to find it out at last—that and many other things she hadn't suspected, including the ways of true love.
