INDISCRETION IN ACTS LAID TO OFFICIAL

Entitled to Complete Exoneration, Says Official

AUSTIN, Nov. 22. (AP)—The house of representatives today held J. E. McDonald, state commissioner of agriculture, had been guilty of acts illy becoming a state official but not warranting impeachment.

"I have done no wrong," McDonald said. "Every cent of money has been accounted for. I feel I was entitled to complete exoneration."

After the committee adoption, the house approved the committee report 87 to 44.

The resolution said it was the sense of the committee that McDonald "by reason of his negligent and indiscreet acts and conduct" was deserving of censure.

With a permanent organization, Miss Pansy Nicholas of Austin, secretary of the state tuberculosis organization, explained Eastland county may retain 60 per cent of proceeds from sale of the TB stamps sold each year.

County Health Officer Dr. T. F. Isbel urged the organization and its aims, citing the need of a society by stating many in Eastland county possibly could have been prevented from having tuberculosis by an educational program.

FLIERS DIE IN BRECK CRASH

BRECKENRIDGE, Nov. 22. (AP)—Dorland Sandlin and A. E. Eaves, both of Whitt, Parker county, Texas, were killed when their airplane crashed shortly after a takeoff from the municipal airport here yesterday.

Witnesses said the plane had attained some height and the fliers were turning back toward the field when it crashed in a wood lot a short distance from the airport.

The two men arrived here yesterday to take home a plane purchased from E. H. Lee of Breckenridge.

The mangled bodies were so buried in the wreckage that rescuers had to work for some time to extricate them, finally using an automobile to drag away the remnants of the plane so they could be removed.

Sandlin was the son of Dr. W. S. Sandlin of Whitt and Eaves was a relative who had lived with the family about a year. Previously Eaves had lived in San Angelo. He came from Arkansas a number of years ago.

Twin lions recently born at Grant Park in Atlanta have been named for President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

INTERSTATE CIGS TAX FREE

FORT WORTH, Nov. 22. (AP)—In a majority opinion the second court of civil appeals held today that the state cannot collect three cents per package on cigarettes shipped into Texas in interstate commerce and cannot impose a tax on the purchaser for his own consumption of them.

The victory was won by Glenn Musser, who sought to prevent the state comptroller or his agents, from interfering with Musser's business—taking orders from Texas smokers, shipping them from warehouses in Oklahoma to fill orders.

MAUNA LOA IN ERUPTION

HILO, Hawaii, Nov. 22. (AP)—The Mauna Loa volcano poured forth flaming rivers of molten lava down the mountain sides today. The crater, was stirred last night by an earthquake, which sent a damaging tidal wave pounding the shores of the Hawaii island.

The eruption's red light was visible in Honolulu, 200 miles away.

The lava rivers, which appeared to be a mile wide, came sliding down the mountain side rapidly, but it is believed there is no immediate danger.

SAYS ACTION PUTS US NEAR SANCTIONIST

Reprisals Threatened; America Watches Shipments

(By Associated Press) Italy viewed with suspicion today the threatened reprisals against the action of Secretary Ickes in asking American oil companies to withhold oil shipment to Italy.

Italians said this action brings America close to the ranks of "sanctionist" countries. The United States continued to maintain a close watch on exports to the belligerents.

The first real fighting "on the considerable scale" was reported at Addis Ababa from the Womberta region as having occurred Nov. 12. Italian losses were placed at 300. The fatalities in the Ethiopian forces were not given.

Ras Seyoum was beaten off at Abaro Pass yesterday. He had circled and attacked the Italian rear guard today, but was repulsed after a hot skirmish.

In a private airplane, James Mills, Associated Press reporter, flew over the southern war zone, and reported no gas cases among the Ethiopian wounded. There is unbounded enthusiasm for Emperor Selassie, he reported.

SPORT SLANTS

By PAP

It has long been a common practice to take a thoroughbred which has had his day on the running track and train him over the jumps. But until Azucar came along last February to run off with the major prize in the $100,000 Santa Anita handicap in California no one gave much thought to the possibility of taking a successful jumper and training him to run on the flat.

Perhaps it was Azucar's great victory that inspired Joseph E. Widener to take Bushranger, a fine jumper, and train him for running on the flat. It will be recalled that Widener bought the Irish-bred Azucar as a yearling and raced him on the turf abroad. As a 2-year-old Azucar showed a distinct dislike for the soft turf tracks abroad, so he was tried out over the hedges. Eventually the thoroughbred drifted into the hands of Fred M. Alger, Jr., of Detroit. The hard, lightning-fast tracks of California were made to order for Azucar and the 7-year-old gelding romped home a winner in the richest handicap ever staged in this country while a great field of highly favored thoroughbreds fought it out for the place and show money.

Won United Hunts.

Bushranger showed great speed on the flat even at the very beginning of his training. His first actual race was over the mile-and-one-half route at the United Hunts meeting for the Whitney gold cup. The made-over jumper broke nicely at the barrier and moved up into a contending position before the first turn was reached. He held his place until the stretch, where he was given his head and proceeded to make a show of the field. The time, 2:32 3-5, was not at all bad. Bushranger carried 118 pounds.

Bushranger's time was plenty fast enough to indicate that he was capable of giving any horse in the land a stiff brush and were he to start in the rich Santa Anita handicap early in the year he would have plenty of supporters.

The former jumper's ability to go the route in such fine style was a bit of a surprise to many turf followers. Bushranger was sired by the famous Stefan the Great and almost all of his get have been classed as sprinters. Bushranger has the early speed of a sprinter and apparently is not bothered by carrying his speed over a distance.

Bushranger to California?

A number of our leading jumpers, Indigo, Luckite and St. Francis, all sons of Stefan the Great, have shown great stamina through the field. This display of stamina in Stefan the Great's get has been explained by the fact that the great sire as of what is known as a soft breed, a type that needs time to develop. Racing 2-year-olds, as we do in this country on

Life of Sam Houston Would Make Great Motion Picture Writer Says

What a great motion picture the life of Sam Houston would make! What other life was ever so packed with color, adventure, heroism, achievement, renunciation, humor and pathos, with a background ranging from primitive Indian life to the gay social life of Nashville and Washington? And that life had important effects upon the destiny of several nations—Texas, Mexico, the United States, France and England. Nor should its effect upon the Indians be forgotten.

Born on March 2, 1793, the birthday 43 years later of Texas independence, Sam began his strenuous life in a family consisting of his father, who was a Revolutionary soldier, his mother, a woman of powerful physique and heroic character, five brothers and three sisters. When Sam went to school, he drilled his mates in military tactics, and incidentally learned to read and write. When he was 13, his father died, leaving his sword to Sam.

The mother and her brood, in ox-drawn wagons, crossed the Allegheny mountains and settled near Maryville, Tenn. Sam had found a copy of the Iliad, in English translation, and it so engrossed him that he practically learned it by heart. With a soldierly disdain for labor, he refused to work as a clerk in the village store, as his older brothers wished him to do, and, taking his story of Achilles, he ran away to the settlement of the Cherokee Indians, where he read, hunted, learned the Indian language, and formed lasting friendships. Thus he lived for three precocious years, from 16 to 19.

Then he came back to what we are pleased to call civilization, and it was not long until he was in General Andrew Jackson's army, fighting against the Creek Indians in Alabama. In the battle of Horseshoe bend, Houston must have been mindful of his Trojan war story for he fought with reckless daring, scorning his wounds until he dropped unconscious. Fifty years later some of the wounds were still giving him trouble, never entirely healed. Henceforth Houston was one of Andrew Jackson's young men; and Jackson was Houston's ideal.

In 1818, Houston left the army and began to read law. His rise was meteoric. Within six months he was admitted to the bar. In 1819 he was adjutant-general of Tennessee. In 1821 he was major-general. In 1823 he was U. S. congressman. And in 1827 he was governor of Tennessee, at the age of 34.

His first term as governor was a success, and in 1829 he was headed for re-election. He was six feet two inches in height, a magnetic speaker, of fine appearance and polished manners — his charm and dignity have been attributed to Indian influence. Jackson had gone from Tennessee into the presidency, and Houston, with Jackson's support, seemed not unlikely to follow his leader in the course of a few years. Though still a bachelor, he was well-known as a participant in the social life of Nashville and of Washington, D. C.

Marriage Not Congenial.

Early in January, 1829, he married Miss Eliza Allen; they were not congenial; he made accusations which she resented; within a few weeks, she left him and returned to her parents. If Houston had died suddenly at this point in his career, the nation would have been shocked; but what actually occurred was more momentous. A part of him died and was buried in silence. The living part of him resigned the governorship of Tennessee and sought out the Cherokee Indians, then settled near Fort Smith, Ark.

His old friends received him, called him by his old Indian name, Co-lon-neh, "the Raven," nursed him in sickness, made him a member of their tribe. In time he took to wife Tiana Rogers, a half-breed Cherokee woman of fine appearance and character, a relative, by the way, of our beloved Will Rogers of Claremore, Okla. When Houston came to Texas three years later, he wished to bring Tiana with him, but she preferred to remain with her people in the home he had built for her near Fort Gibson.

Came to Texas.

Two trips to Washington, in 1830 and 1832, had brought Houston again before the nation, and in the latter year he came to Texas with high hopes. Some say he had orders from President Jackson to bring Texas into the Union. He traveled across the state, met the leaders, took a prominent part in political conventions, and reported to Jackson.

On his forty-third birthday, March 2, 1836, he signed the Declaration of Independence of Texas, and as commander-in-chief issued a call for Texans to join the army. Too late to prevent the fall of the Alamo and the massacre of Goliad, he led his army in unwilling retreat to the San Jacinto field, and there, on April 21, 1836, led his 743 Texans against about 1,400 Mexicans. Within 15 minutes the battle had become a rout. Only six Texans were killed, whereas 630 Mexicans were killed and 730 were captured, including Santa Anna, the president of Mexico.

Within a few months time, Houston was elected president of the republic of Texas, and on March 2, 1837 the final vote was taken by which the United States recognized the independence of Texas. The signing of the bill was the last official act of President Andrew Jackson. "Old Hickory" lived to see the United States congress pass a joint resolution for the admission of Texas to the Union, and he died on June 8, 1845, with Houston and Texas in his thoughts. Thirty minutes later Houston was at the bedside of his departed friend.

How Houston served two terms as president of the republic of Texas, 13 years as her United States senator after annexation, and one term as governor of the state, cannot be detailed. From first to last he was devoted to what he regarded as for the best interest of Texas and the Union.

On May 9, 1840, he had married Miss Margaret M. Lea, who not only loved him but hoped to reform him — and reform him she did! He quit drinking, quit swearing, learned to forgive his enemies, and became a member of the Baptist church. Of this marriage were born four sons and four daughters. One of the sons, Andrew Jackson Houston, is now living at La Porte, Texas, near the San Jacinto battle-ground. The old patriot died at his home in Huntsville, Texas, on July 26, 1863, just three weeks after the fall of Vicksburg. All his family were present except his eldest son, Sam, who was then wounded and a prisoner in the north. A union soldier, who had been imprisoned at Huntsville, made the coffin in which Houston was buried.

Always a fighter, despite the fact that he turned aside 14 challenges to duels, including those of President Lamar, General Albert Sidney Johnston and Commodore E. W. Moore of the Texas navy, he proved himself the only man who had the power to control the rugged individuals who made up the principal part of the republic of Texas. What man ever experienced and achieved more than he in three score years and ten?

BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

Arise, O Lord; save me, O my God: for thou hast smitten all mine enemies upon the cheek bone; thou hast broken the teeth of the ungodly.—Ps. 3: 7.

Lovest thou me? Then feed my lambs, The loving Master said. Oh, little feet that long to stand, But need the strength of a steady hand, Love guides, be not afraid. —ELIZABETH JONES.

A little blessing may become to us a proof of infinite Love. To say the least, it will give us a brighter view of life; and when the light of that brighter view enters our consciousness it is sure to cause the specter of sorrow to vanish. As we find reason for contentment, the discontent which irked our souls is certain to give place to it.—Frederick, Okla., Leader.

Another Great Step

The big American air liner, China clipper, was poised today on the Pacific coast for the beginning of another great advance in the history of practical aviation—the closing of the gap in a world-girdling airways service carried on by American airlines and those established by other countries. The big plane was due to take off at 3:30 this afternoon (PST) on an 8,000-mile inaugural flight via American possessions in the Pacific to Canton, China.

AMERICAN genius has already girdled central and south America with regular airmail and passenger service. The China route is an extension of this enterprise. The influence of this upon relationships between the United States and pan-American nations has been marked. Extension of this sphere of influence westward to the orient is not pleasantly contemplated by Japan whose ambitions envisage herself as the sole arbiter and preserver of peace in that hemisphere. But regardless of how suspicious the Nipponese may be of American enterprise in that direction, the development of regular and dependable air service over that vast stretch of sea and territory will further the civilizing influences of close international associations. It was not so long ago when a trip to the Orient meant weeks and weeks upon the sea, accompanied by innumerable hazards. Now it will be accomplished within a comparatively few hours. This drawing of east-and-west-together in an embrace of swift transportation ought to have a salutary effect upon relationships.

Oil Companies Cooperate

THE administration has no power to prevent the shipment of petroleum or petroleum products to the belligerents in the Italo-Ethiopian war, but the announcement of several of the leading oil companies in the United States that they have complied with the request of the government that they do not disregard the "spirit" as well as the letter of the president's neutrality proclamation is a happy indication that big business has no desire for the sordid profits of a business created by the spectre of war. The Humble Oil and Refining company, big Texas unit of the Standard, and other large concerns are taking the lead in this matter. Their example will have a great influence upon other enterprise, an influence that will possibly make the neutrality policy of the administration effective far beyond its legal definitions.

ITALY, meanwhile, has recalled 100,000 men from the guns to the spades and the hammers. It is necessary to step up production at home to offset effects of the most unusual instance of international cooperation in the cause of peace in history—the spectacle of half a hundred nations cooperating in the economic punishment of an aggressor. The situation is not without its hazards. Practically all wars—indeed, it may be said all wars—start from some economic cause, concealed in incident as it may be. The sanctions against Italy, no doubt surprising to Mussolini because of the extent of cooperation in them, are deeply resented, and are certain to bring about retaliatory measures. Effects of them will endure for a long while after their application has passed, and a fundamental shift in international relationships with a cleavage into two international and hostile camps may be the ultimate outcome. But regardless of that, the application of the sanctions will test the power of the League, and the neutrality position that the American states have taken will greatly bolster the League's action, although the United States cannot be said by any means to be a party to punitive measures invoked by the League countries. This country's action in the premises is simply the observance of neutrality rules in the face of what is recognized to be war.

RIGHTNESS or wrongness of the war in Ethiopia is no issue with America except as it pertains to maintenance of our national honesty and self-respect in the premises and protection of the interests of our nationals abroad insofar as it is possible to protect them.

BUT the idea that the Ethiopians ought to be civilized by the sword is more Islam than Christian, and it is difficult to see how it can be adopted by civilized society in justification of what is aggression on the face of it.

Where is Lenore Ulric, dramatic actress who rose to her greatest heights under the late David Belasco? At her rural home in Harmon, New York, when she isn't at her town house on 72nd street, where she relaxes and rests in the century-old atmosphere of a house that was built during colonial days.

At the moment she is considering two plays, both leading roles of which are "bad girl" characters. The only fly in the ointment is the producer's fear the police may step in and close the show, which would mean a terrific loss.

But, Miss Ulric wouldn't mind that, except that she wouldn't want her friends to lose their money. She remembers that Mae West's show was closed and she was hauled into court. Now she is in Hollywood coining thousands each week.

'Ding,' President's 'Bad Boy,' Returns to His Drawing Board

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22 (AP)—Jay Norwood Darling, "Ding," to the followers of his cartoons, has been the "Peck's Bad Boy" of the Roosevelt administration during his two years as chief of the biological survey.

He has upset all forms of governmental procedure and bowled over opposition like an All-American back. He was a member of the republican national committee and of the Hoover nominating committee in 1932, then served in a democratic administration as head of one of its principal government bureaus.

Reorganized Bureau. "Ding" took the job, he says, because he saw an opportunity to give the nation's wildlife a new lease on its old haunts and breeding grounds while spending some of the government's relief billions to provide jobs for the unemployed.

Once in office, he reorganized his bureau completely. He put in his strong bid for federal funds, equipment and men, with the ultimate aim of reclaiming for wildlife some of its natural breeding and nesting areas and providing a multitude of preserves and refuges where they would be safe from hunters' guns.

Can Swear Eloquently. "Ding" is 53 years old, weighs 165 pounds, is five feet ten inches tall, smokes cigarets incessantly, can swear eloquently and vigorously on occasion, was once kicked out of college for drawing cartoons of faculty members, loves to hunt and fish and accordingly has been an agitator for wildlife conservation for 30 years, collects fine books and is an expert amateur gardener.

He paints in oil or water color and makes fine etchings on an old stereotyping press as well as he draws cartoons and can sketch with either hand, having learned to draw with his left hand after his right became temporarily paralyzed about 10 years ago as the delayed result of a boyhood accident.

Musicians Stay Thin Or Quit In Edith Lorand's Orchestra

By JOHN SELBY. NEW YORK, Nov. 22 (AP)—Edith Lorand, who is a Hungarian violinist and orchestra leader in spite of a Scotch grandmother, arrived the other day with her slim orchestra.

Miss Lorand has her own ideas about the makeup of an orchestra. She will employ only men, only rather handsome men, and only slender men.

Her first violinist, for example, lost 40 pounds before the orchestra left Budapest for America.

"The doctor was a little worried," admits Miss Lorand. "But in a small organization like mine the picture is so very important. Roly-poly men don't fit in."

Plays 'Dance' Music. The leader is a violinist herself, she also is a devotee of Hungarian folk music, and plans to introduce much of it to America. She insists that her audiences understand that gypsy music is not necessarily Hungarian, and that much of what we call Hungarian music is really gypsy—as much Russian, for example, as Magyar. Miss Lorand plays much dance music but not for dancing. She plays such music as the Beethoven country dances, the Viennese waltzes, the Landler, and so forth. Many of the classic composers, Hadyn for example, wrote much music for chamber orchestra, and that is what Miss Lorand's is. She brought 15 men to America,

Man About Manhattan

By GEORGE TUCKER

NEW YORK, Nov. 22. (AP)—If you would like to know the meaning of such theatrical terms as "gallery gods," "tormentors," "hoist the rag," "risley act," "razorback," "weed in the grass," and probably 26,000 others, you should get an interview with Barry Buchanan, who has spent three years compiling them in an encyclopedic dictionary of the amusement world.

Buchanan says he asked a 76-year-old circus man about the phrase "risley act," the circus term or all juggling acts in which the juggler lies on his back and manipulates the object with his feet. The 76-year-old referred him to a former performer aged 90 who told Buchanan it came from the name of the two men who first used it, Al and John Risley.

"Tormentors" is the name for the abutting scenery on each side of the stage which cloaks the entrance or exit of the actors. It was so named in the days of the old open air theater when the actors, and actresses, changed costumes behind this barrier. It "tormented" the spectators not to be able to see this operation.

"Gallery gods" were the spectators in the old third balconies, now no more, who were almost mingling with the cherubs and

by Jeanne Bowman

SYNOPSIS: Although she has been cheated of her interest in the Farnsworth canneries by Tom Farley and his gang, Anne Farnsworth, now known as Nikki Nielsen, has gone to a secluded cove to prevent the angered fishermen from damaging company property. Lee Farnsworth, her uncle, has been killed and the Sorki brothers, Anne's protectors, have been accused of the deed. She is at the jail, ready to tell the authorities the truth of what happened earlier this dark and stormy night.

Chapter 35. ACCUSATION.

"You say you were in the boat with the Sorki brothers," said the sheriff. "Why were you in that boat?"

"John Neuman sent the boys after me when he found the fishermen were determined to take law into their own hands. He thought that I might appeal to them in the name of Luke Farnsworth, as his daughter."

"You're not his daughter," snapped Tom Farley.

"Will you let me take care of this, Farley?" roared the sheriff. "I think you'd better get out in the other office, before I . . . I . . . well you'd better go."

"You can't put me out of here, I'm an attorney."

"And you're not on this case. The other room."

As the door closed behind him, the sheriff turned again to Anne. "Continue, please."

"We saw the men leaving in their boats and followed in ours, taking a final chance to reach them."

"You say 'ours'?"

"I own a third interest."

"You were not in that boat when it put back to port." The chief made this statement.

"No," she agreed "I've tried all along to protect my identity. When I realized I was too late to help, I only wanted to go back to the peace of being just Nikki. The boys took me to Hunter's wharf, and I walked back to town."

"If you were so eager to protect your identity, why did you come to the sheriff's office and give yourself up?"

"Give myself up?" she repeated. "You don't understand. Miina, she's the boys' sister, told me they were being held because a gun had been found in the boat. I knew they couldn't have fired that shot, because Orvi was still at the engine and George at the wheel, when . . . must I repeat that?" she begged.

"I'm afraid so. Tell me exactly what happened."

Anne told him of someone calling her name, of something whizzing past her head, of seeing Lee Farnsworth fall even as she turned to look at him.

"I remember a boat bumping into ours and then hearing a thud," she recounted. "I believe whoever did the shooting threw the gun into our boat then."

"And you came down here to free them with your testimony, was that it?" he asked.

"Yes, and please may we all go home now? The shock of Uncle Lee's death is almost more than I can stand. He was the only one in the family who was good to me."

Anne felt that if she couldn't reach the privacy of her room, she would break before these men who eyed her so accusingly so silently accusing.

"Miss Nikki," there was tolerance in the sheriff's voice, sympathy even, "where did you get the gun?"

"What gun?" she asked.

"Perhaps the boys had it and you didn't know about it," he surmised.

"You mean—" she paused in consternation, "you mean you don't believe what I've just told you?"

He shook his head. "Sorry, my girl, but the easiest thing or all of us is for you to come clean; tell the whole truth; get it off your mind. You'll suffer if you don't."

Anne surveyed him pityingly. "I've told you the whole truth," she said calmly.

"You've told me your version, I knew from questioning the Sorki brothers that they were protecting someone. I didn't realize it was a girl. Yes, Harry," as the deputy came to the door a slip of yellow paper in his hand.

The sheriff took the slip, studied it and looked at Anne. Where before there had been pity, there was now only stern condemnation.

"One more question, Miss Nikki," he said, and his voice was cold and metallic. "Why did you carry your foster father's gun away from the Portland home, when you left?"

"I didn't carry any gun away with me," countered Anne in wonder.

"Miss Nikki," he pointed to the slip of yellow paper. "The gun which fired the shot that killed Lee Farnsworth is registered to Luke Farnsworth. It disappeared from the house about the time of your departure. It was found in a boat at the scene of the shooting. You were in that boat. You didn't come to the wharf like an innocent person, you sneaked in; walked two miles out of your way, to keep from being found."

"Young woman, you killed Lee Farnsworth."

Anne listened to the sheriff in sharp amazement. The words fell with the driving force of hammers, pounding nails into her heart, staples into her memory. She had thought she needed courage before, but now . . . Luke, or John . . . she needed someone to stand by her in this moment and give her strength.

"You are wrong," she heard herself saying calmly, and then her voice broke. "I loved Uncle Lee, please let me go now?"

"Take her Harry," the sheriff nodded towards the deputy.

Anne started forward eagerly, moving towards the door of the outer office, but the deputy caught her arm and swung her, gently in the opposite direction.

They passed through a door, into a corridor. The deputy motioned the jailer, who brought out a ring of keys, fitted one into the lock of a door, and opened it.

Anne stared before her. There was a big, white room and in it small compartments, divided one from the other by iron bars. She heard the door clang behind her. Obediently she started to follow the deputy across polished linoleum to a desk, behind which sat a plump, white clad matron.

"A girl for you, Mrs. Nelson," said the deputy.

Anne looked at the floor, which was buckling beneath her feet. She looked up once to see the plump woman spring into action, brush the deputy aside. She caught Anne in her arms.

"I ne-eeever, f-fant," stammered Anne, with shivering dignity. She looked at the matron who seemed gyrating about at one side of her, at the white bars which whirled around. It reminded her of a composite picture on the motion picture screen.

"Tech-tech-tech-tech," said the matron between her teeth, propelling her towards one of the small cubicles. "Soaking wet," she added.

"Well, let's book her and get it over," suggested Harry.

"Book her my eye," retorted the matron. "I'm going to get the child to bed."

Anne shuddered violently. "Cold," she managed between chattering teeth.

"Open that door, Harry."

Anne stepped over the grating at the bottom of the door, saw a white cot and sank onto it.

"Harry," the matron was still snapping orders, "take this key, go to my locker and bring that brown wool robe. Then put a teakettle of water to heat on the gas plate."

"I've got to get back."

"Do what I tell you."

"Oh, all right."

Anne sat dazed as the woman stooped over, pulled off her white sneakers, her stockings, loosened her slacks, pulled them off, slipped a plain white gown over her head, then wrapped her in the brown robe Harry brought her.

The matron was gone a few moments, then returned with a hot water bottle for Anne's feet, and a steaming glass of hot lemonade for her to drink.

Anne's teeth chattered against the edge of the glass until she feared she might break it, but she tried until it was drained, and then she was allowed to sink back, fatigue racking her bones like physical blows.

Dimly she tried to follow the events of the evening. She was in jail. That was funny. She, Anne Farnsworth. No, Nikki Nielsen was in jail. Wouldn't Aunt Charlotte and Sharlee gloat? But, no Uncle Lee was dead, someone shot him.

She heard her name mentioned. Anne Farnsworth. She's traveling under Nikki Nielsen, but she sheriff says he figures the other's her legal one."

There was the scratch of pen on paper.

"Hold for investigation," Harry prompted.

Again the scratch of the pen which seemed intolerable to Anne's nerves.

"No charge yet. District attorney's calling the grand jury in the morning, and by the time they're through she'll be held for Mother, I can't Study - My head hurts!

As a usual thing, he is "such a regular guy." He comes home from school full of pep and energy. Of course you want him that way always. But are you protecting his health and safety during the few short months of winter when he must spend his evenings indoors?

That uncomfortable "stuffy" feeling . . . dullness . . . lowered vitality . . . headache—these are some of nature's ways of complaining against improper heating and insufficient ventilation. These are the warning signals that America's Public Health Enemy Number One, the common cold germ, has found another fertile field in which to attack. For your health's sake and that of your loved ones do not wait for these definite signs of warning that the air indoors has become stale. Keep the air you breathe constantly purified with fresh oxygen through adequate ventilation in every room in the house.

Without oxygen man cannot live. Without oxygen, fuel cannot burn. Therefore, if your family "huddles" in one or two rooms around an open flame heater during cold weather with the doors and windows tightly closed, you are violating all the rules of nature, good health and good heating. Sooner or later the occupants of the room and the burning fuel reduce the oxygen content to the point where the room air becomes stale. Without adequate ventilation and circulation the air indoors may become as foul and unhealthy as that of the tenement slums of large cities, even though your home may be the most beautiful in the neighborhood.

A simple and easy method of providing a constant circulation of fresh air is found by opening a window in each room a few inches from the top and bottom. Connecting doors left open between adjoining rooms when the entire house is adequately heated provide a natural circulation of pure warm air from one room to another. Incidentally, fresh, pure air is easier and more economical to heat than "stale" air.

Guard the health of your loved ones with adequate heat and proper ventilation of pure air in every room in the house.

Eligibility Requirements for Old Age Pension Are Explained by Registrar

EASTLAND, Nov. 22. — Explanation of the old age pension law and directions about how to secure an old date birth or death certificate were given Tuesday by Mrs. John Matthews, registrar for the Texas Bureau of Vital Statistics at Eastland.

Mrs. Matthews' explanation: In order to secure the old age pension, the petitioner must meet the following requirements:

- A. Must have attained the age of 65.
- B. Must be a citizen of the United States.
- C. Must reside in Texas five years during the last nine.
- D. Must not be an intimate of, nor receive aid from any home or other institution except for medical care.
- E. Must not have transferred property to other persons in order to secure pension.
- F. Must not have an income over $360, or if married, not over $725 per year.
- G. Must not own property with a taxable value over $5,000 or, if married, $7,500.
- H. Does not own marketable securities of more than $500, or, if married, $1,000.
- I. Is not an habitual criminal or habitual drunkard.
- J. Has neither husband or wife able to secure adequate support.

One of the provisions in the old age pension is that the petitioner may establish his age by a birth certificate. There is in the Bureau of Vital Statistics a birth certificate of a woman born in Texas in 1859. It stood up through the courts of Denmark. The grand children of that woman participated in the division of her grandfather's estate.

Those who expect to secure old age pensions should file their birth certificates now, but in handling those records, there are several things that you must remember:

- 1. Neither the state nor the city will pay the fee for these records.
- 2. The expense must be borne by those wishing to file the certificates.
- 3. There must be two affidavits attached to each certificate.
- 4. The certificate must be written as a statement of the facts as they exist at the time of the event. If the physician is dead, the record may be signed by a relative or any person who was acquainted with the facts at the time the event occurred.
- 5. The person who signs the record must execute the first affidavit. (A)
- 6. Some person not related by blood or marriage but who is acquainted with the facts must execute the second affidavit. (B)

Full instructions and printed forms with affidavits attached will be furnished by your local registrar. Records on typewritten forms will not be accepted.

When the record is filed, a certified or photostatic copy may be secured and attached to the petition for an old age pension as establishing the age of the petitioner.

For instructions see Mrs. John Matthews, 212 North Walnut street, Eastland, Texas.

Moderate Gains in Sales of New Cars

AUSTIN, Nov. 22. (AP) — New passenger cars sold in 15 representative Texas counties during October totaled 3,694, showing moderate gains over both the previous month and the like month last year, according to the University of Texas bureau of business research. These increases were 11.8 and 6.4 per cent respectively. A total of 48,975 cars were sold in these counties during the first ten months of 1935, an increase of 15.7 per cent over the corresponding period a year ago. Sales in the lowest price bracket showed a moderate decline from a year ago, while substantial gains were registered in the intermediate groups and a marked increase occurred in the highest price bracket, the bureau's report said.

Morning Star

(Concluding Installment.)
Chapter 45.
CARROLLTON.
Saturday night came. Emily went slowly, almost reluctantly, down the stairs, the taffeta skirt swirling about her feet. David saw her from the living room, and came quickly to meet her. He was smiling, but his hand upon the newel post betrayed him: it was gripping the post so tightly that the knuckles stood out white.

"Portrait of a lady descending a staircase!"
She smiled faintly. "It wasn't meant to be. I hate portraits; conscious ones, I mean."

"That depends," he said "on the subject of the portrait." He slipped her hand through his arm and they moved across the shimmering floor to the living room.

People were arriving rapidly. The orchestra took up its position in the hall and began to tune its instruments. The guests had discovered the punch bowl and were already grouped around it.

David's voice said in Emily's ear: "The first and the last dances are mine."

The orchestra began to play—a throbbing, minor rhythm which, like all negro music, seemed an echo of the jungle's heart-beat. David was before her, wordlessly holding out his arms, and she went to them with a homing motion that left him suffocated with wanting her. He closed his eyes for an instant, and brushed his lips lightly across her hair.

The dance was a great success. During supper the negroes sang, as they had sung at Carrollton—this time a spiritual she had never heard before.

Emily was the sensation of the evening. She tried valiantly to hide the glow that David had kindled, but men and women, watching her as she danced with him, glanced at each other and smiled a little wistfully.

Dan Raynor hadn't come—a previous engagement, he lied almost convincingly.

When the last guest had departed Judith yawned ostentatiously. "I'm not even going to look at this wreckage until morning. Good night, my children."

She went upstairs with Aubrey, whose arm was about her waist. Emily and David were alone before the living room fire.

Emily's heart was beating so that she could hardly breathe, but her resolution was made. She said without preface:

"David, why haven't you been to Carrollton?"

He wrenched his eyes from hers and stared into the dying fire. "Because I've been afraid. I'm going to morrow."

She said it quickly, while her courage held. "May I go with you?"

His head came up. He stared at her, unbelieving. "You mean—you'd really go?"

"I'd love it, more than anything in the world—if you'd let me."

"If I'd let you—" He turned away, staring again into the fire. She went quickly from the room and left him there.

They drove in to Montgomery the next morning to get the key to Carrollton from a real estate agent. It was Sunday, but the agent, in answer to David's urgent request, would meet them at his office at eleven, and drive out with them.

They left Morton hall at half-past ten, and during the drive to Montgomery they scarcely dared to speak or to look at each other. The agent was waiting at his office, and in his eagerness came with David to the car, talking rapidly.

"It's in a terrible state of repair," he explained, "but I think you'll find that it has wonderful possibilities. It's really one of the finest places in the state." He had caught David's name, but found in it nothing but coincidence.

David merely looked at him. "You're telling me?" he said, and got into the car.

Emily laughed as the car moved away. "David, he had the best intentions in the world!"

His mouth relaxed and he grinned suddenly.

"That was rough, wasn't it? I'll apologize when I see him again." He headed the car towards Carrollton.

all, in think that he wanted her; in forcing her presence upon him—it was a shameful thing to do—a thing she couldn't even imagine Frances Fulton's daughter doing.

Suppose he hated her for it, and couldn't tell her?

And then, for the first time in nearly eight years, the car was turning into a driveway; was rolling through an avenue of trees that led to the house like an aisle to an altar—

He stopped before the wide front steps, and for a long time neither of them spoke. They were gazing at the depredations that so short a time had wrought.

The house almost cried for paint; great bare smudges of gray dotted the fluted columns and defaced the lofty facade. The raying fanlight was almost empty, and an occasional pane of glass leered at them with an evil wink.

The shutters had been torn away—to be used for fuel, probably, by the scattered tenants. The front steps sagged dispiritedly, and dead leaves and branches covered the driveway and the porch.

And beyond the house stretched acres and acres of weeds and sapling pines.

Emily forced herself to look at David, and the expression in his eyes left her cold with fear. She said very softly:

"Would you like for me to wait here, while you go in alone?"

He turned to her quickly, and the appeal in his eyes was an answer to all her doubts.

"I couldn't stand it unless you were with me."

Hand in hand they mounted the unsteady steps and crossed the wide veranda, dead leaves rustling under their feet. David inserted the heavy key and then paused, with his hand on the knob.

"Emily, I've got no right to ask this. I'm going to be so beastly poor—" He might have been re-suming a conversation interrupted a dozen seconds before.

She shook her head, holding his look with hers. "I can think of so many worse things, David." Things, for instance, like life with Edwin. "Besides," her eyes twinkled, "you haven't asked me. I've done it all myself, I'm afraid."

For the first time the veil lifted, and she saw the laughing eyes of the other David.

"You!" he chuckled derisively. He flung open the heavy door and turned back to her, and his voice was suddenly shaken.

"There's a family tradition about these things," he said. And lifting her into his arms, he stepped across the threshold.

THE END.

To Urge Erection of Monument to C. U. Connellee

EASTLAND, Nov. 21—Erection of a monument to the memory of C. U. Connellee, legislator and sometimes called the "Father of Eastland," will be urged by Judge R. C. Crane of Sweetwater, president of the West Texas Historical association, to the Texas Centennial commission.

County Judge Clyde Garrett has written Judge Crane suggesting that if the monument is approved, it be placed on the courthouse lawn in Eastland in the town he founded and lived for 55 years.

Connellee was widely known in Texas. He was the author of the separate coach law, which provides for separating whites from negroes in transportation vehicles. Connellee was a regent of C. I. A. at Denton, now Texas State College for Women. In 1911 Connellee was appointed by Gov. O. B. Colquitt as a member of the state board for the purpose of locating and establishing a state tuberculosis colony.

Text of Judge Garrett's letter to Judge Crane: "Mrs. C. U. Connellee advises me that you, through the West Texas Historical Society are urging the Texas Centennial to erect a monument to the memory of C. U. Connellee as one of the builders of West Texas.

"We, his friends in Eastland, are enthusiastic over the movement, and if the West Texas Historical Society is successful in placing his name, I, as judge of the commissioners court, and as a warm personal friend of Mr. Connellee, ask that you consider placing this monument on the courthouse lawn in Eastland—in the town he founded and lived for 55 years."

Football Triumphs by Bishop's Three Sons Birthday Presents to Mother

EVANSTON, Ill., Nov. 22. (AP)—Sunday, November 10, was a happy day in the life of Mrs. Ernest Lynn Waldorf, wife of Bishop Waldorf of the Chicago area of the Methodist Episcopal church. In the first place, it was her birthday, and in the second place, three of her sons gave her what she calls "perfect" remembrances.

Lynn's Boys Beat 'Irish.'
Lynn, head football coach at Northwestern university, returned from South Bend, Ind., with the first Northwestern victory over Notre Dame in 34 years.

Paul, head coach at McKendree college, Lebanon, Ill., led his team to an upset victory over Illinois Normal college, 6 to 0.

Robert, 17, the youngest, plays guard on the New Trier high school in nearby Wilmette, and his team defeated Evanston, 21 to 6. Incidentally, Bob blocked a punt for the first New Trier touchdown.

A Football Family.
And that, says Mrs. Waldorf, is enough to make any mother happy on her birthday.

The Waldorfs have long been a football family. Another son, John, captained the University of Missouri team several years ago, and later was head coach at Nebraska Wesleyan.

Of the three older boys not one has evinced an interest in the ministry despite the hope of their father that one would follow in his footsteps.

So far Bishop Waldorf has had to be satisfied with having his daughter, Ethel, marry into the ministry. She is the wife of the Rev. Albert Wagner at Crystal Lake, Ill.

"We three older boys have never agreed on anything," says Lynn Waldorf. "We all went to different colleges, learned different styles of football, and joined different fraternities."
