SELASSIE PREPARES TERMS FOR PEACE

Ready to Advertise for Bids on Eight Street

Through the Editor's
Spectacles
By GEORGE

One of these goshawful mid-winter colds has just about doubled me up and laid me on a shelf. It started working on me several days ago in the shape of a sneaking early morning soreness in the throat. I didn't pay any attention to it because I thought, what with cold weather swimming under Forrest Wright's tutelage, I had developed into a real he-man. But one of these babies can take the he-man stuff right out of you and leave you as weak as a wet rag. Judge and the rest of the boys took the burden of the Thursday issues while I lay at home and drank orange juice and hot water and whatever else I thought could have any influence on this disease. And it is beginning to look now that I'm going to have to go right back to bed and do the thing all over again. When one of these things does hit a "he-man" it knocks the sap right out of him plenty. Sniffle-sniffle—SNEEZE!

County Judge Clyde L. Garrett has his eye on Cong. Thomas L. Blanton's seat on Capitol Hill at Washington. Garrett has been openly throwing out feelers here and there to determine sentiment. It has been pointed out that had Joe Jones carried Eastland county by the majority he hoped to achieve he would have defeated the veteran congressman. Jones ran well outside the county but failed to receive the Eastland county support that he expected. As a matter of fact Blanton beat him in this county, although Jones ran ahead of Blanton in Shackelford county, from where Blanton began his climb to national prominence.

There is no doubt in the minds of most observers that Garrett can carry Eastland county with plenty to spare. Garrett is one of the best politicians that Eastland county or this section ever produced. He is the sort who "electioneers" all the time and who constantly "grows" in political strength. It would be a mighty hard thing to beat him for county judge of Eastland county—as hard as it will be to beat Thomas L. Blanton for congress.

But his chances outside the district are another thing. Conditions of dissatisfaction and discontent with Washington and national economic matters generally do not prevail as they prevailed in the Blanton-Jones campaign period when the spirit of change was in the air. It is quite true that there is present a growing dissatisfaction with the national administration among business leaders, but not so in this part of the state to speak of.

Garrett is an organizer and it is my opinion that if he should set out to oppose Blanton with a determination to continue at the job long enough he would steadily grow in strength. But to dislodge Blanton from his present strong position in the district would be a task to be approached with resolution and the means to stick a long time. In Jones, Blanton met a prosecutor type of campaigner, one who didn't mind the mud, and could give with as much vigor as he could take without staggering. It was his element and he was equal to the rough-and-tumble tactics. He and Blanton provided a political war long to be remembered in this section for its energy and bitterness.

Garrett, a less sensational and arm-swinging type than Jones, is also equal to the rough-and-tumble. He has a more solid and commanding appearance than the vitriolic Jones and his record

WORK LIKELY TO START BY FEBRUARY 1ST

Will Advertise for Bids Early in January—3 Contracts to be Let

J. E. Spencer, commerce secretary, has just been advised that the highway department is now ready to advertise for bids early in January for the construction of the Cisco cut-off and concrete viaduct over the Katy tracks of highway No. 1. He was also informed, the Daily Press was told, that the department expected to begin construction the latter part of January or early in February. The route has been surveyed and approved by the department, Spencer said, and practically all of the right-of-way has been secured.

The new route of the highway will leave the present highway at the J. T. Stamps place, intersecting East Eighth street at the Texas & Pacific railroad right-of-way, and come into Cisco over East Eighth street, and the concrete viaduct to be constructed over the Katy tracks.

Traversing West Eighth street the route will be west out of Cisco, intersecting the present highway near the dynamite house located in the F. E. Harrell pasture.

Spencer stated that the construction of this new route will be let in three contracts—the viaduct, and the east unit and the western unit separately. The total cost of the road and viaduct is estimated will be $160,000, and the viaduct alone is planned to cost $80,000. The specifications will call for completion of this project by June 30 1936, giving employment to the unemployed for five months. To do this, Spencer said, means the working of a large force of men, which is expected to practically absorb the unemployed in this locality.

Planes Will Bomb Flowing Volcano

HILO, Hawaii, Dec. 27. (AP)—Twelve United States army bombing planes were here today ready to blast the molten lava from Mauna Loa volcano out of its course which is threatening Hilo's water supply and the city itself. If the barrage fails, a detachment from the Third Engineers will try dynamite.

Laughing Around the World With IRVIN S. COBB

Scarcely a Lucrative Calling

By IRVIN S. COBB

A GROUP of wealthy Southerners, Virginians and Kentuckians mostly, were on a train returning from a meeting of the National Fox-Hunting Association. Naturally the talk dealt largely with the sport of which they were devotees. A lank Vermonter, who apparently had never done much traveling away from his native state, was an interested auditor of the conversation.

Presently, when the company in the smoking-compartment thinned out, he turned to one of the party who had stayed on. He wanted to know how many horses the Southerner kept for fox-hunting purposes and how large a pack of hounds he maintained and about how many foxes on an average he killed in the course of a season.

The Southerner told him. In silence for a minute or two the Vermonter mullied the disclosures over in his mind. Then he said: "Wall, with fodder fetchin' such high prices, and with dog-meat for hounds a-costin' what it must cost you, and with fox pelts as cheap as they are in the open market, and takin' one thing with another I don't see how you kin expect to clear much money out of the fox-huntin' business in the course of a year."

Spencer Gets Xmas Greeting

J. E. Spencer told the Daily Press today of the receipt of a most welcome Christmas greeting in the form of a telegram from Edgar Butts, general manager and superintendent of The Orondo Mines, located in California, the gold mines of which Spencer is one of the principal stockholders. Mr. Butts was rather optimistic regarding the mines, as he stated prospects looked much better. That he had sunk a shaft to the 400-foot level and encountered a vein of gold-bearing ore, four feet thick, that assayed $12 to the ton, which is better than the vein he has been working on the 300-foot level.

Butts, well-known Cisco engineer, is in full charge of The Orondo Mines, Spencer said, which gives splendid promise of developing into a rich producer.

King Felton Works on New Tricks While Guest of Aunt

By R. W. H. KENNON
King Felton, magician, who was the feature of Brunk's Comedians showing here in December, 1934, is spending the holidays with his aunt, Mrs. A. P. Slater. He is accompanied by Mrs. Felton and Miss Frances Maloy, who is one of Felton's assistants in his magic work. While here Felton is working on new stunts of magic, and making new stage properties which he will use.

While resting up during the holidays Felton is making a new box, into which he places Miss Maloy, after which he saws the box into three sections. But owing to his feats in magic, the lady emerges without a scratch or scar—can you tell how he does it? We can't.

Felton stated that he would be glad to stage some benefit show under the auspices of some organization during the holidays. Probably one of the clubs, welfare association, or some other organization—which might like to pull off a benefit entertainment. If so he will be glad to confer with the heads of any of those bodies.

They are spending the holidays very pleasantly with their aunt, Mrs. Slater, and probably none are happier than the aunt. Last winter the Press had a story of this reunion with Felton and his aunt, whom he had lost track of for 40 years. Learning she was here, he looked her up, and provided a reserved seat for her at every entertainment while the show was in Cisco. Felton said none enjoyed the show more than Mrs. Slater. When the show left he carried his aunt with him, and she became one of the troop for several weeks. He told the Daily Press man that as soon as they get squared away on their spring tour he will have Mrs. Slater to join the show and become a part of his retinue.

Felton is now with the J. Doug Morgan's show, showing in East Texas, which he will rejoin after the holidays, probably about the 6th of January.

In the event any of the local organizations should desire to stage a benefit performance Mr. Felton can be contacted at the home of Mrs. Slater, corner of West Sixth street and F avenue.

WILLS RELICS TO SOVIET
MOSCOW, Dec. 27. (AP)—A collection of 200 ancient bronze idols, dug from the sands of the Mongolian desert, was willed to the soviet government by Peter Koslov, noted explorer who died in September. The collection is to be placed in a museum.

SAID ACTRESS BEAT IN CAFE

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 27. (AP)—A sensational, but unverified report stated that a man, figuring prominently in the Thelma Todd inquiry, beat the actress severely a few days before she was found dead, gave a startling turn of the grand jury investigation today.

Captain Jess Winn, and attaches of the district attorney's office, said the report related that a man struck the actress and knocked her across the table after an argument, and that a waiter intervened.

Dead Rancher Found Suspect Is Hunted

BUTTE, Montana, Dec. 27. (AP)—The discovery of the body of Floyd Woods, ranch caretaker, today led officers to believe that he was slain by Harry Knight, ex-convict, who is wanted for three other slayings, causing them to rush posses in this section to apprehend the suspect.

Missionaries Claimed Behind Student Riots

TOKYO, Dec. 27. (AP)—A government spokesman said today that consular reports reaching the foreign office charged that missionary schools under American and British influence were taking a leading part in the Chinese student agitation against Japan. He declined to discuss possible Japanese action.

Chinese agitation mounted in China, over-riding and quickened the representative activities of the central government.

Two thousand students persisted in their efforts to enter Nanking on the commandeering a train, as the bodies of students sought to commandeer trains to other points.

CHRISTMAS VISITORS
Mr. and Mrs. Jake Courtney have had as their holiday guests Mrs. J. S. Bross and daughter, Lillie Mae, of Rockdale; Mrs. J. D. Elam and son, of Duncan, Oklahoma, and Mrs. Faye Dawson and Mr. Dawson, of Tyler, Texas. Mrs. Bross and Mrs. Elam are sisters of Mr. Courtney, while Mrs. Dawson, the former Miss Faye Courtney, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Courtney. They departed today for their homes.

COUNTY BEER VOTE IS SET FOR JAN. 3RD

Local Option Legalization of 4 Per Cent Beverage Sought.

A local option election to determine whether or not beer and wine of not more than four per cent alcohol content by weight, has been called in Eastland county for January 3, it was announced by County Judge Clyde L. Garrett. The election was called after presentation of the proper petitions, the county judge said.

The petition was signed by 829 voters who addressed the commissioners court with the plea that unless four per cent beer and wine are made legal in the county many business, including several wholesale distributors, will be forced to leave the county.

Ballots will be printed as follows:

"(a) For legalizing the sale of vinous and malt liquors that do not contain alcohol in excess of four (4) per cent by weight.
"(b) Against legalizing the sale of vinous and malt liquors that do not contain alcohol in excess of four (4) per cent by weight."

Blanton Is Seen as Dictator of District Funds

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27.—District officials are awaiting, apprehensively, developments in the house appropriations committee brought about by the assassination of Senator Huey P. Long.

The impending development is the expected presence of representative Thomas L. Blanton (democrat), of Texas, in the chair during District supply bill hearings at the approaching session of congress. Representative Clarence Cannon (democrat), of Missouri, had been expected to preside.

While replacement of Cannon by Blanton in 1937, providing both are re-elected and the Democrats maintain their majority, was expected because of a shifting of posts on the house committee, it has just been learned that the change may occur in January, 1936, rather than a year later.

The change is contingent upon whether Representative John N. Sandlin (democrat), of Louisiana, finds time to carry on his campaign for the senate seat left vacant by Long's death and at the same time preside as chairman of the house appropriations sub-committee on agriculture.

If, as now seems probable, Sandlin finds he hasn't time to conduct the agricultural hearings, Cannon will preside, as he is ranking member of the sub-committee, leaving the post to the ranking majority member, Blanton.

Uruguay Gives Soviet Minister Passports

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay, Dec. 27. (AP)—Uruguay, taking precautionary measures against alarmist rumors of revolt, handed Soviet Minister Alexander Minkin and his staff their passports today.

In breaking diplomatic relations the action was attributed to the "ramifications" during the November uprisings in Brazil. Brazil charged that instructions to the leaders of the rebellion were sent from Montevideo, and the chief instigator alleged to be Luiz Prestes, associated with the third internationale. Brazil complained that the soviet legation was implicated in sending revolutionary instructions to Brazil.

Laval Says Told Italy Implied Oil Embargo an Act of War.

(By Associated Press)
A Reuters News dispatch said today that Emperor Haile Selassie was reported to have prepared peace terms which included the withdrawal of Italian troops from Ethiopia, the recognition of Ethiopia as a sovereign state, and the payment of an indemnity by Italy.

It is reported that Emperor Selassie is ready to pledge that Ethiopia would seek foreign advice, economic, administrative and financial assistance with Italian influence barred.

Ethiopia announced the capture of 11 machine guns, rifles and ammunition in a skirmish on the northern front. They accused the Italians of attempting to provoke a revolt against the payment of imperial taxes.

Italy reported heavy Ethiopian losses in a fight which killed nine Italian and wounded 50.

LAVAL ASSURED OF CONFIDENCE VOTE

Premier Laval, staking the life of his cabinet on his explanations to settle the war told the chamber of deputies today that he had been informed that Italy would consider oil embargo an "act implying war against Italy."

He vigorously defended his efforts, promised to continue them and pledged his support to Great Britain in fighting off any Italian attack.

His speech was regarded as showing him a narrow but safe margin on tomorrow's vote of confidence.

London sources said that the Mediterranean nations may hold conferences and plan joint defensive movements if Italy attacks any of them.

New Club Cafe to Open at 4 Today

Coffee and doughnuts will be free at the new Club Cafe this afternoon at 4 o'clock when the new restaurant is opened by Lloyd Doyle, who formerly operated the Palace Cafe.

The Club is located in the building across D avenue from John H. Garner's department store. The cafe is decorated in a mahogany color scheme with very attractive fixtures and fittings.

There is plenty of table space and comfortable counter seats. Doyle is noted for the quality of food and service that he provides his patrons and in his new location he is equipped better than ever to provide this service.

He invited all his friends and his future patrons to have a cup of coffee and a doughnut free of charge. A string band will play during the evening.

Gun Club to Have Holiday Shoot Sun.

The Oil Belt Gun Club will hold a special session holiday shoot for members and friends on Sunday, December 29 at the club house and range on the Castleberry farm on Highway 87 nine miles north of Cisco, it was announced.

BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

The Lord will give strength unto his people; the Lord will bless his people with peace. For in the time of trouble he shall hide me in his pavilion: in the secret of his tabernacle shall he hide me. Ps. 29:11; 27:5.

"O way, through which our souls draw near To yon eternal home of peace; When perfect love shall cast out fear, And earth's vain toil and wandering cease. In strength or weakness may we see Our heavenward path, O Lord, through thee."

"If you are in Christ, you are in a fortress, and God's own peace, the greatest of sentries, keeps watch and ward at the gates of this all glorious stronghold."

Is History Repeating Itself?

ACCORDING to the morning papers it's beginning to look mighty menacing in the Mediterranean where Italy is preparing to openly resent the efforts of Great Britain to institute an oil embargo which would deprive airplanes and motorized land forces of fuel and do more to "leave the Italians out on a limb" than any sanction the League of Nations has yet imposed. Mussolini's determined defiance of the League's efforts to stop his conquest of Ethiopia is evidence either of the megalomaniac determination of the Duce to emulate the Caesars or a condition of the Italian nation so desperate as to warrant the most desperate measures. Judging from the persistence of Mussolini on his course to date, despite remonstrance and baring of teeth on the part of potent League members, such as Great Britain, it is reasonable to presume that the Italian Dictator is going to cast his all upon a big gamble as the ancient Romans did with Cathage many centuries ago to win control of the Mediterranean over a country vastly superior in sea power and naval training and strategy. Those of you whose memories of history pages are yet fresh will recall that Rome, just looking over the borders of its domestic peninsula, came into conflict with the Cathagenians in Sicily, valuable as a producer of wheat. It became obvious to the astute Roman mind that there could be no Roman security, much less empire, so long as the power of Carthage dominated the sea. First wars were not decisive and the struggle went on for many years, with Italy invaded by Hannibal, laid waste and all but subdued by the military genius of a man who lacked the wisdom of the concluding stroke and left the Romans their walls upon the Tiber. Exhausted by his marches and battles of conquest and confronted with an elusive enemy and the marvelous Roman ability to recuperate, Hannibal was finally forced to return to the defense of his own land where the Romans under Scipio were dealing the invaders a dose of their own medicine. There in a decisive battle he was defeated and Carthage was finally destroyed. It required sea control of the Mediterranean to accomplish this task, and when the long, long conflict first started the Romans knew practically nothing of the sea. A stranded Carthagenian galley washed upon their shores provided them with the essential design of a vessel of war and from these they constructed a great fleet. It met defeat and so did subsequent fleets sent against the enemy. But gradually the Romans developed seamanship and by providing their ships with grappling hooks and boarding planks that could be dropped upon an enemy deck they overcame their disadvantage in seamanship by employing their superior ability at close, hand-to-hand fighting.

WITH control of the Mediterranean, they were able to invade Carthage and, after surviving the ravaging invasion of Hannibal, to prosecute the war to a successful conclusion.

BUT today's modern warfare presents a new problem, although the ends and objects of the conflict are substantially the same. Will England rise in the guise of a modern Carthage with control of the sea and a great empire to protect against the encroachments of a new Rome, just now rising in a feel of might that has been lacking since the days that the Caesars ruled the seven hills? If so, can the Italian arms wrest control of the Mediterranean and its life-line of English empire from the hands of the British might? If a struggle ensues as persuasive Anthon Eden, youngest of British foreign ministers in many a day, prevails upon to the League to enforce an oil embargo against Italy, what will the effect upon the rest of the world be? It is beginning to look as if history, in some of its elements at least, is repeating itself in the old cradle of western civilization.

THE GAY THIRTIES

seems less vulnerable to Blanton's characteristic manner of attack than Jones, whose record of fee receipts was used by Blanton to brand him with charges that were later refuted when the state actually refunded Jones money for what he was found to have overpaid into the state treasury while district and county attorney.

But to defeat Blanton next year or any year, for that matter, is a task to be approached with great respect and circumspection. Blanton is one of the most peculiar campaigners and politicians in the world. But that he has a genius for his job is to be adduced from the fact that he adopts the most unorthodox of methods and makes a success of them. He is not a social person. He spends little time among his constituents and practically none at parties. And then he is obviously in a hurry to be away. At home and at Washington, the only public glimpses to be caught of him away from the house chamber, are between his automobile and his office door. He bears out with singular effect the idea that he is constantly engaged in attending to the business of his constituents. And the influence of that idea upon the minds of the voters, accustomed to think of politicians in terms of handshaking and baby-kissing, is potent.

On the other hand Garrett has made a great success out of the administration of the county affairs of Eastland county through one of the most difficult periods of readjustment in the history of the state. He is forethoughtful to a great degree, and one of the prime movers in statewide organizations of county officials and in the promotion of programs of financial re-organization and benefit to counties. He heads, or did head, the state association of county judges and commissioners and was one of those who secured state adoption of county bonds voted to build cardinal roads. Through his efforts and those of the commissioners court the county had obtained a great appropriation for lateral roads and other improvements.

He would be a foeman worthy of Blanton's steel. It would be an interesting contest, to be sure.

A Washington Daybook

By HERBERT PLUMMER

Washington—Whatever is accomplished finally in the way of naval limitations at the London conference now in session—if anything—the whole subject is almost certainly due for an airing in the coming session of the senate.

The presence there of a rather retiring senator, somewhat short of stature, and with closely-cropped light hair—"Freddy" Hale of Maine—assures it.

A former chairman of the senate committee on naval affairs and now the ranking Republican member of that group, Hale is following with the keenest interest the proceedings in the Locarno room of the British foreign office.

Political Tradition

The name of Hale has been one of power in national politics for more than a half-century.

"Freddy," as he is known to intimates, is the son of one of the most influential men ever to hold a seat in the United States senate. For 30 years Eugene Hale represented the state of Maine in the national lawmaking body. His grandfather, too, on the maternal side, was a senator as well as secretary of the interior.

Early the son Fred was picked to succeed his father in politics. He came to the United States senate in 1916 and has been reelected ever since—the last time in 1934, when the reelection of a Republican senator was something of an event.

While classed as a member of the Old Guard in the senate, on several occasions during his career he has shown progressive leanings.

Champions Big Navy

He rarely speaks on the floor of the senate on any subject but the American navy and its needs. He has made the navy the one big thing in his career as a senator. He was chairman of the senate naval affairs committee from the beginning of his second term in 1922 until the Democrats were swept into control of the government in 1932. He believes that "a powerful American navy is the strongest factor for peace in the world." As chairman of the naval affairs committee, over powerful opposition in the senate, he succeeded in getting passed the bill providing for 15 additional cruisers.

Senator Hale is a bachelor in his late fifties. He plays golf for recreation while in Washington, but back in Maine his love for the outdoors comes first. Camping and fishing in the Maine woods are his favorite diversions.

Human and Other Nature By W. F. BRUCE

I'll take this assortment of colored Christmas candies and this dish of hulled pecans and put them safely behind the door of the China closet. I've eaten a hearty dinner of Swiss steak and the trimmings, of salad and vegetable dishes, of ice cream and fruit cake and a few mincings of candy and nuts out of this same source of temptation. I left the table fairly comfortable and ought to have learned through years of Christmas experience, from babyhood up, to let well enough alone. But there it sits right at hand within easy reach while I sit here at more elevating exercises. I can't conveniently remove myself from the vicinity of the enticement, so why not remove it?

And why not? Man is so constituted that he is constantly subject to allurements into some forbidden orchard. Why not make it the main purpose of government to spend its time and its thought upon the important problem of human conduct as affected by temptation? The amount of regulative and prohibitive legislation that is turned out every year shows that statesmen have looked upon such measures as important. Man's weakness calls for such action by government as keeps the indulgently inclined from hurting themselves and their associates. I have known men to move from towns with saloons to small dry communities because they feared results of their own strong appetites and weak wills, especially upon their own families. Men have requested confinement in jail to escape yielding to overpowering temptation.

But I suppose a still greater victory would be for me to leave the sweets before me and restrain my appetite. Restraining legislation that demolishes sources of temptation seems to be needed. But the real safety of society rests in exercise of will power on the part of every individual. The Creator let the apples grow in the garden of Eden and has allowed many things to remain strewn around us that entice us. Mostly temptations lie in over-indulgence of normal needs; hence the source of a temptation is apt to be also the source of a necessity that could hardly be removed. Self mastery then is the only guarantee of temperance.

NEVER MIND THE LADY by David Garth

SYNOPSIS: Allaire West just has dropped in on her dissipated father at his enormous estate in Virginia. But she decides after talking with him that she cannot stick it out, and starts back to Washington to visit her giddy mother. Ray West, disconcerted in turn, orders his private car to be attached to the New York train. Meanwhile, Terry Willett just has returned his father to Carteret, Va., for his last long rest—and while talking to the rector is wondering whether to go back to the tropics and his engineering contract.

Chapter 19.
INTRUSION
The venerable rector, who had both christened and buried Lawrence Willett, was disturbed—this powerful bronzed son was getting ready to ride again. He tried to arouse in him some softening sense of family by pointing out the various inscriptions in the little churchyard.

He showed Willett where lay the ancestor who had been killed in the fighting around Fort Duquesne in the year of Our Lord seventeen hundred and forty-five. The marker was of red stone, weathered, cracked, and nearly undecipherable.

There was the Willett who had come home to die from the rigors of the Lewis and Clark empire-building expedition, and the three sons of Judge Nathaniel Willett who had galloped hell-for-leather with "Beauty," Stuart's calvary into lines of belching guns.

Quite an illustrious cavalcade to ride behind alone, but Terry Willett had been knocking around the world too long to have assimilated any sense of family. He listened courteously and then looked at his wrist watch.

"Good-bye, sir," he said. "I'll be pushing along."

"Terence," said the minister, haven't you thought you might have a duty to—all of them here?"

Willett gave him a long straight glance. "Duty" he said. "Don't talk to me of duty, sir. I'm a bust as an engineer and a worse bust as a son. Let it go at that."

The minister didn't want to let it go at that by any means, but there was nothing he could do about it.

"At least you might be interested in seeing your old home," he urged, putting his stiff aged fingers into Willett's firm and youthful clasp. "A graceful courtesy to your father, Terence."

"Where is the governor's place?"

The minister furnished explicit directions. Willett nodded. "Might take a look at it. Thanks for everything; you were damn decent."

He strode off. "You were damn decent." The minister shook his head slowly, put his pince-nez back astride his nose, and reflected sadly that divinity schools have their limits.

The historic town square was protected by an iron fence—there was some sort of a statue—Willett walked through the town of his forefathers with the attitude of a man waiting for his train to get through a tunnel.

But he stopped to look at the house where his father had been born—a big white house with six columns rising to the roof cornice. There was a drive through an avenue of locust trees, and at one side of the house were the overgrown remains of a terraced garden.

Nobody had lived here for some time—the house was boarded-up, the grass needed mowing, and a weatherbeaten sign stuck in the lawn announced the property was for sale or rent and referred to some bank.

His face was a study as he looked searchingly at the place, as if to drink in a picture that would last, because this was a day of last farewells before the world moved on. Some day he might want to remember it, some day, somewhere—

A train whistle sounded down the valley. Willett snapped to. "Goodbye, Dad, here's how!"

The fast flying "Old Dominion" disdained to stop in Carteret for the sake of passengers, but the little matter of a water tank was accepted as a necessary evil.

Clouds of steam issued from the hot boxes, a conductor waited watch in hand on the platform for the flash, and two little barefooted negro boys stood near the observation platform of a long silver-gray private car named "Debutante II," their eyes popping out of their heads. Terry Willett arrived at the station on the jump. "That was the New York train?" he asked the station agent.

"Yeah, but it aint the local," said the agent. "This train don't stop for passengers."

"Whatever it's doing now," said Willett, "is all right with me."

He walked over to "Debutante II" and swung up on the observation platform. "Hey!" yelled a brakeman. "That's a private car."

"Do tell me," said Willett. "What's private about it?"

"I'm tellin' you you can't ride there."

"If you don't like it," said Willett, "there are any number of things you can do with it."

A negro in white servitor's coat came out on the platform. "This is a private car, suh," he warned. You can't ride heah. Ah'm telling you."

"Listen, you," said Willett. "You can't tell me anything."

"Tough guy, huh?" commented the brakeman from the station platform.

"Come on up here, flunky," invited Willett, "and find out for yourself."

The brakeman decided it didn't really make any difference anyway, but the negro began an officious protest. Willett inquired if he'd like to be tossed right the hell off the train entirely.

The inquiry was attended with an unmistakable eagerness and put an end to further argument, and Willett brushed him aside and went into the car.

It was a private car all right—big club chairs, a small mahogany bar, thick grey carpet and soft toned curtains—a blend of luxurious comfort and modernistic beauty.

A pretty girl and two men were shooting dice on the floor. Tall glasses reposed perilously close to their heels, and a nearby buffet table was laden with a parade of bottles and bowls of cracked ice.

"Listen," the girl was saying spiritedly, "I left a six here and you can't put me behind the eight ball with Snake Eyes. A woman has some rights, you pirates."

Her indignant pronouncement met with an exception from one of the men, a young army officer.

She leaned weakly back on her heels and noticed Willett. "Well, well," she observed,

Tickners Enjoy Family Reunion Christmas Day

The home-coming gathering of the children of Mrs. W. J. Tickner, widow of the late W. J. Tickner, Cisco's first and oldest rural mail carrier, and who held his job, by special order of the postal department long after reaching the age of his retirement, was held Christmas. Mr. Tickney commenced delivering the mail to rural folk long before the automobile age, when he had one of those "cute" little cabs of a buggy, to protect him from inclement weather. It took him all day to make the rounds of rural route No. 1, which was the first route established out of Cisco. Later he acquired a Ford, and made the trip in half the time.

Mrs. Tickner, now 66 years of age, joyfully welcomed her children and grandchildren, Christmas day. A bounteous feast was enjoyed by the hostess and her guests at mid-day, and the afternoon was pleasantly passed in reminiscences of those days when these men and women were children.

Those present were Mr. and Mrs. John W. Tickner and daughters, Mildred and Velma Lee; Mr. and Mrs. Guy Marvin and children, Durwood and Azilee; Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Phillips and daughters, Blanche, Tylene and Florence; Mr. and Mrs. Van Tickner and children, Dorothy and Martin Van; Miss Mildred Parmer, granddaughter; Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Hamilton; Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Tickner and children, Mary Laverne, Rush Allene and Betty Lou; Mrs. Irvin Finley and daughter, Kathryn; Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Finley and children, Margaret Jane and Hugh Edward; J. W. Steven; Miss Mae Tickner; Dayton Steven.

French Craft Catches Wild Boar at Sea

ANDIERENE, France, Dec. 27. (AP)—Fishing for sardines in the bay, the lugger Reine-des-Flots caught, not only the proverbial whale, but a superb 200-pound wild boar.

Driven out of the woods by hunters, the animal was about three miles offshore when sighted.

The fishermen knocked him on the head with a hatchet, took him home and sold him to the local butcher for a good sum.
