HOME TOWN GOSSIP

The stern looking gentleman shown in the inset is M. G. (Mack) Underwood, who has accepted the position as first assistant to Ike Kendrick at the postoffice when he takes over Uncle Sam's business here in the near future.

Power to you Ike and Mack.

There is nothing that will make one appreciate the every day comforts of home so much as a week end on the river.

It's really nice to pitch camp under the sheltering boughs of giant pecan trees and cook your meals from an open fire, if the weather is agreeable. But when you are awakened at midnight by a whipping rain in your face, and forced to tramp miles through knee deep mud, water soaked to the skin, fleeing from a stream that has risen to dangerous heights, that's another thing. Yes, suh, it "sorta" makes one appreciate the significance of those words, "There's no place like home."

For further reference and proof of this point see me for at least eleven other good witnesses.

And speaking of water soaked experiences, they say Eddie Priest, "Doc" McGowen and Lewis Norman, were trapped by a similar circumstance last week end. They were forced to bed up for the night on the bank of the Bayou Saturday, when high water prevented their crossing. About five o'clock they awoke with water up to their knees in the automobile and a friendly snake sharing their shelter.

Each day brings additional offers to the first local couple to be married in a public ceremony at one of the Cross Plains churches. Here's a real opportunity for some "loving pair" to wed for mercenary reasons, if none other.

Dave Smith started the idea a couple of weeks ago by advertising that he would give $10. in groceries to the first newly wedded set to comply with the above mentioned specifications. Since then the following additional offers have come in.

Schooley's Bakery, a wedding cake; Higginbotham's, a furnitural gift; Carmichael's Cafe, a feast for two; Review, five year subscription; Lot-leaf's, baby blanket; Neeb's Service Station, five gallons gasoline and City Barber Shop, $2. in trade.

If no one accepts the proposition before next week, we will endeavor to get local preachers to donate their services and the florist to contribute a few flowers.

ODDITIES

M. C. Baum, rural mail carrier out of Cross Plains, concluded his twenty first year of continual service Wednesday.

WALTER WESTERMAN IN BROWNWOOD HOSPITAL

Walter Westerman who has been in a Brownwood hospital several days will return home Sunday. His condition is said to be materially unchanged.

Heavy Rain Falls In This Vicinity

Two and three fourths inches of rain have fallen in the city limits of Cross Plains since Saturday. The hardest fall was Saturday night, when approximately two and a half inches was the measuring.

Streams near here—Bayou, Jim Ned and Turkey Creek—were all swollen after Saturday night's rain. The Bayou was not crossable for more than 20 hours.

BABY BORN FRIDAY

An eight pound baby girl was born to Mr. and Mrs. Aubra Cross Friday morning. The child has been named Nancy Dean Cross.

TRUCK GROWERS ORGANIZE

METHODIST REVIVAL TO CLOSE SUNDAY

EVANGELISTS HAVE SPOKEN TO LARGE CROWDS REGULARLY

Rev. and Mrs. R. L. Flowers Alternate In The Preaching

Sunday night will bring to a close the annual Methodist revival meeting which has been in progress here 12 days. Evangelist and Mrs. R. L. Flowers have been alternating in the preaching.

The following report of the services was written by a reporter from the Methodist church.

The Flowers revival that is now well into second week has attracted large crowds and wide attention. This week has been a busy week for the preachers. They have had five daily services and each of these services were well attended. Evangelist Flowers spoke at the Wright Cash Grocery Store building to a well filled house, at the same hour Mrs. Flowers delivered a series of lectures to women on The modern woman. In the afternoon at 4:30 a large crowd of young ladies met with Mrs. Flowers in a series of heart to heart talks to them. These special services have attracted large crowds. The night crowds have filled house each evening. One of the outstanding meetings of the whole campaign has been the series of young folk services conducted by the evangelists just before the night service. Nearly every young man and woman in Cross Plains has been in these special meetings.

The Flowers have proved to the folk in Cross Plains that they know what they are about. From the very first service of the meeting, the crowds have come to the meeting. There have been many reclamations and several conversions. The Evangelist said in most of his meetings the most of the converts came the last few services of the revival.

Mr. and Mrs. Flowers go next week to their home for a few days rest and on June 12 they begin a union meeting of all the churches in Whitewright, Texas. The pastors of Whitewright have arranged for a large place to take care of the crowd that will seat 1500 people.

The revival will close here Sunday night. It has been some time since the Methodist church has had crowds in their special meetings. Every where on the street only words of commendation can be heard of the work that is being done in the meeting.

C. P. BAND TO PLAY RADIO CONCERT SOON

Cross Plains Municipal Band will play a concert over radio station K-F. P. L. Dublin, within the near future; probably about the middle of June. An invitation from Manager C. C. Baxter was received by the Review the first of this week. After a conference with Clyde Sims, manager of the band, the radio station was informed of the acceptance and authorized to set a date for the concert.

Details of the radio program will be given in next weeks issue of the Review.

LOCAL POST OFFICE CREW ATTENDS DISTRICT MEET

Cross Plains postal employees attended the district convention, of the 17th Congressional District, at Cisco Monday. Among those from here present at the conclave were; Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Cross Plains The City Where Dreams Come True

Editors Note: No better picture of the type of man and womanhood that first settled Cross Plains could probably be sketched from an artist's pen than the following editorial clipped from the Cross Plains Review, February 24, 1911. It breathes of the spirit that prompted those sturdy pioneers of more than a score of years ago to match their strength and wits against adversities of this then inhabited West. It is published herein because of the encouragement that it should be to us to Carry On in times such as these.

If a thousand years are but as a watch in the night, the great heart of the ages has hardly throbbed a beat since the Indians left the Cross Plains country. Yesterday we had the cowboy, the cayote and long-horn cattle. Tick tock, goes the great clock, and we have the thriving railroad town, and a country thickly dotted with nice farm houses and peopled with happy and prosperous farmers. What a country of dreams we have. Not idle unreasonable dreams, but beautiful dreams come true. God said let there be light and there was light. He smiled and there was Cross Plains.

When one considers things as they were and as they are in this communi-

FUNERAL RITES HELD SATURDAY FOR R. P. ODOM PIONEER HERE

Stores Close As City Joins In Unanimous Tribute To Veteran Minister

Funeral service for Rev. R. P. Odom, 75, was held from the Methodist Church here Saturday afternoon. The rites were conducted by Revs. C. C. Armstrong and T. C. Thorn, both of Cross Plains; Dr. J. W. Hunt, president McMurry College, Abilene and Rev. O. C. Stapleton, Methodist pastor, Dressy. Interment was made in the Cross Plains cemetery. Deaths resulted early Friday morning of heart disease.

Rev. Odom was a Methodist minister in this section for more than 35 years. Failing health forced his retirement several years ago. He had been a resident of this county more than 50 years.

Heart disease, which had confined Rev. Odom to his home most of the time for more than a year, grew worse Thursday night. He succumbed shortly after four o'clock Friday morning. Miss Myrtle Gatlin, Mrs. Odom and the attending physician were at the bedside when the end came.

Surviving are his wife and nine children; Price Odom, Coleman; Ralph Odom, Snyder; Ivan Odom, Rowden; Otis Odom, Stanton; Dorsey Odom, Denton; Mrs. Pitt Ramsey, Cross Plains; Mrs. Parker Bond, Santa Anna; S. E. Odom, Denton; and Mrs. Tillie Gilbert, Santa Anna.

All Cross Plains business houses closed during the funeral and interment service. Friends crowded the Methodist Church beyond capacity and scores waited outside to join the procession to the cemetery. This little city literally participated in a unanimous tribute to one of its pioneer citizens.

Active pall-bearers were: Fred Outbirth, Hugh McDermott, George Baum, S. R. Jackson, Taylor Bond, W. A. Williams, J. L. Settle and Hugh Edgington. Honorary pall bearers were: B. B. Bond, T. E. MEET HERE MONDAY NIGHT TO FORMULATE COOPERATIVE PLAN

Cottonwood Has Already Made Contact With M.K.&T. That Appears Valuable

Truck growers in the Cross Plains trade territory will meet in the high school auditorium here Monday night, to discuss plans of marketing collectively this Summer. Secretary Conner Elliott of the Cross Plains Truck Growers Association, states that specific contracts have been made and that indications for successful marketing of tomatoes, watermelons, sweet potatoes and cantaloupes are good, if growers cooperate in the movement of organization.

Cottonwood truckers were perhaps the first to take action in the securing of an outside market. They have communicated with the industrial department of the M.K.&T. railroad and a representative of the railroad will be here about the middle of June to assist the farmers in finding a market for their truck commodities.

45 Cottonwood truck growers met in the school building there Tuesday night and perfected an organization to sell their products collectively. H. S. Varner was named President. He canvassed the acreage of the truckers present and found that in the Cottonwood locality there were approximately 70 acres in sweet potatoes, 60 in tomatoes, and 15 in watermelons. Numbers of other farmers with large acreage in these commodities were not present but it was intimated that they would affiliate with the collective marketing plan.

President Varner, of the Cottonwood Truck Growers, appointed committees to cover that community thoroughly and get accurate reports on the amount of acres in sweet potatoes, tomatoes, watermelons and cantaloupes, and render their report at the next regular meeting of the group there Tuesday night, June 7.

The Cross Plains Truck Growers Association will meet in the high school auditorium here Monday night and formulate plans to cooperate with the Cottonwood unit and others in this trade territory. May, in Brown County, may also be asked to cooperate with the growers of this section in a collective marketing plan out of Cross Plains.

The meeting at the high school here Monday night will be called to order at eight o'clock, probably by E. M. Howard, one of the principal truck growers here. Everyone interested in the movement has been invited to attend.

C. F. ELLIOTT'S CAR STOLEN WEDNESDAY

A 1929 model Ford coupe was stolen from Cyrus Elliott here Wednesday night. The car was parked in front of the W. A. Huckaby residence, in the northeast part of town.

W. A. Peterson, deputy sheriff here, is working on the case but was unable to report anything Thursday at noon.

Prowlers are said to have made other loots near here earlier in the week. William Fore, who lives three miles East of Cross Plains, on highway 23 lost harness from his barn Monday night. Three tires and two wheels also taken from C. O. Hamilton home.

Settle Tailor Shop To Trade Work For Poultry

Announcement is made in this issue of the Review by Jim Settle's Tailor Shop that they will exchange cleaning and pressing for poultry or produce. Mr. Settle said that he would allow one cent above the market price. An advertisement to that effect appears on another page of this paper.

ASK AND IT SHALL BE GIVEN UNTO YOU--

Henry Ford once let a contract for the purchase of a large quantity of steel. Several weeks later a close friend, who was also in the steel business, approached Mr. Ford saying, "Why didn't you let me have that order Henry."

"You never asked me for it John", was the automobile magnate's reply.

How true that situation is today. We merchants frequently take too much for granted. We sometimes assume that our friends will trade with us, even though they are never asked.

To approach a friend personally, regularly, may leave the impression that we are interested primarily in his patronage, rather than his association. The solution to the problem is:

A constant advertisement reminder goes into the homes of our friends and invites their trade in a very formal, specific manner. It indicates that our business is being run in a competent fashion and that our prices and merchandise are in line with competition.

Bruce Barton once said, "Reputation is repetition".

Continually repeating your weekly advertising message will as surely bring results as will the constant drop of water wear away the hardest stone. Plan your advertising budget. Prepare your ads. Build them in a fashion attractive to the eye and spiced with values, then watch the agreeable results.

The Review has current mat services to supplement your ad with pictures, illustrations or practically any type of attention compellers that you may especially prefer. Two advertising men are at the constant disposal of Cross Plains merchants to assist or suggest in the planning of advertising.

Just call the Review for "Glen" or "Jack" and we'll not only hurry down to help you with the ad but we'll have a big fat nickel cigar to let you smoke, if we happen to be prosperous that day.

MAN MADE THE TOWN

by RUBY M. AYRES

Twelfth Instalment

Diana, a young English girl, in love with Dennis Waterman, a married man who undergoes a nervous collapse and is sent to the country to recuperate under the care of Dr. Donald Rathbone, who lives near the cottage where she stays. She finds herself falling in love with the doctor, but still trying to hold Dennis' affection. Linda, Dennis' wife, tells her that she offered Dennis a divorce but he would not accept it; he would have felt compelled to marry Diana. Diana's love for Doctor Rathbone is tempered by jealousy of a woman named Rosalie, who lives in the doctor's house. A last Rathbone finds that he is deeply in love with Diana, but he confesses to her that Rosalie is his wife.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

"I was terribly sorry for her, too and perhaps—flattered that she should think anything of me, but I did not love her, Diana, and we were just friends until—until I got an appointment abroad. When I told her about it she—it was the first time anything really definite was spoken between us. Perhaps I wasn't very brave, or perhaps I didn't really care for her sufficiently well, but I tried to show her how impossible it was—that I could not—There is no need to tell you every detail, and God knows I am not blaming her any more than I blame myself, but without my knowledge she told her husband that she cared for me, and she asked him to divorce her—He refused. I have often wondered why, seeing how he had always neglected her—Then, after a short time, she left him Diana—if you know how hard it is for me to tell you this—"

He broke off agitatedly, but Diana did not speak, and after a moment he went on again.

In the end—in the end—I agreed to take her away. We thought it would force her husband to divorce her—She was so different in those days, gay and reckless, never counting the cost of anything—only living for the moment—Then—the night before we were to have gone she was nearly killed in a motor accident. She was driving her own car and she was alone—She was unconscious for days, and when she recovered—she was as she is now—like a child. She recognized me, as she still recognizes me, but only as an affectionate child might, and that is all. The rest, everything that has happened in her life, is gone from her.

"I paid a visit to see her husband—she had nobody else who cared or who could have looked after her—and I remember that he laughed in my face. He was a much older man than I, and he said to me, Well, you've begun to pay already, Rathbone, and you'll go on paying for the rest of your life.—It seems that he was right—I brought her down here to my house, and Mrs. Farmer came to look after her. Two years later her husband died—and I married her, Diana. You see, I'd always promised her that if she was ever free I would. I gave my word, and I felt that I must keep it. There was always a thought in the back of my mind that perhaps some day she might get better—and know! I didn't tell anybody—it wasn't anybody else's business so she's still always 'Miss Rosalie' to Mrs. Farmer and Hobson—and to the rest of the household. But she is my wife, Diana, though I—we—we've never lived together as man and wife.

"That's all—Perhaps I was stupidly quixotic, but I was—fond of her, and besides—I had given my word. She's like a gentle affectionate child, always happy—asking nothing except that people are kind to her. She made very little difference to my life one way or the other till—I met you, and then I realized what I had done.—Even then I thought it only meant that I should be the one to go on—suffering. You seemed so much younger than I feel—I never imagined you might—might grow to care for me, and when I realized that perhaps—quite unconsciously—you—had, I tried my best—a poor best, I can see now—to keep you from realizing the truth. I don't think you will ever know what it meant to me—how I—when Nero hurt you, and afterwards, when you—when you asked me to tell you not to go away with Waterman, I could have borne it for myself, but to know you were unhappy—perplexed—that you didn't understand why I should seem so unkind—"

CHAPTER XVIII

He stopped speaking, and Diana said faintly:

"You mean that—She—Rosalie—Like sweet bells jangled—out of tune," Rathbone quoted grimly.

Diana closed her eyes.

There was a little silence; then she said again:

"Perhaps—some day—when we're both quite old—I shall wonder—if you have forgotten me. Do you think you will, Donald?"

"I shall never cease to think of you—and love you."

"But you'll send me away from you—all the same. I know that's what you mean to do, she said with a cry of pain.

"What else is there for me to do, Diana?"

"I could see you sometimes—couldn't I?—Not very often if you didn't want to—but just—sometimes!—I wouldn't care what people said if you didn't. I'll do anything—anything you want me to do, if only it doesn't mean I shall never see you any more—We could just go on—"

She turned 'round, lifting her face to his. "Kiss me, Donald."

being friends."

Do you think we could—just go on being friends, Diana?"

She struggled for words in which she could best express herself. It seems to me that it wouldn't be such a great—wickedness if you and I lived together, even if we can never be married. Don't think all the wrong things about me for saying that. I know quite well what I'm saying. It wouldn't be like going away with Dennis—that was just a sort of bravado—defiance—to try and forget you. I'd made up my mind to drink lots of champagne to-night just so I should not care, but if it had been you—I love you just as well every minute of the day as I do now. I shouldn't care if you never kissed me or made love to me at all, if I could just be with you. I've been so silly. You said once that you didn't believe I'd ever met real love.

"I hadn't till you came. I must have been waiting for you. Can you understand that, too?"

"You make me very humble, Diana." She leant forward a little, trying to see his face.

"And—will you?" she asked.

"Will I what, my dear?"

"Let me give with you?"

Rathbone turned suddenly, groping for her through the dim light and taking her to him with the strength of despair.

"Let me kiss you—let me kiss you."

She put her arms around him, and their lips met and clung together in a first kiss that seemed as if it could never end; Diana could not think, could not reason; she was only conscious of the passionate joy he brought her, and when at last he let her go, she asked with a sob:

"And can you kiss me like that and still want to send me away?" For already she had realized the hopelessness of her appeal.

"I love you so terribly," Rathbone said, but it was no answer to her question.

Diana put up her hand and gently touched his face.

"Donald?"

"Yes, my heart?"

She caught her breath on a half sob.

to me before."

"Like what, Diana?"

My heart—isn't that what you called me?"

"You are my heart."

She leaned her cheek against his shoulder, and his arm tightened a little, drawing her closer to him.

"You're such a child," he said with emotion.

She shook her head.

"I'm not—not any more. I think I grew up all in a moment, just now, when you kissed me."

"I ought not to have kissed you."

She laughed at that; she felt that at all costs she must not allow too great a sadness to come between them.

"Why not?" she asked. Why not—if you love me?"

She turned round, lifting her face to his, "Kiss me again, Donald."

But he would not.

We've got to face facts, Diana. We've got to realize that we can't go on meeting—like this. I'm not made of stone. We've got to make up our minds that the only possible thing is to say good-bye.

She gave a little cry.

"Don't do that, Diana. Don't cry, for God's sake—I can't stand it. I'm to blame for all this—I ought never to have done what I did tonight.—You were right when you told me that I only just pretend righteousness."

He took his arm away from her, and with a great effort she checked her tears, though she sat forlorn and shivering.

Then Rathbone said heavily: I must take you home.

She was silent for a moment; then she broke out:

"If I'm never going to see you any more—"

"I didn't say that, Diana."

"But you mean it, I know it's what you mean," she told him despairingly. She broke off to ask breathlessly after a moment: I wonder what you think is to become of me?"

She would go back to London, she thought, tearfully, she would pay visits, and laugh and flirt, and stay up late, and get sick and weary and bored once again, with no hope of anything better to come.

She said with a last effort:

"If you would only promise me that some day I should see you again—and be with you. Can't I have anything to hope for? Don't you want to be with me too?"

Every moment of all my life.

She said, with a touch of her old obstinacy:

"If you really meant that, you wouldn't send me away. You've often talked to me about being happy."

"Now I've got the chance—a beautiful chance—you won't let me take it."

She was silent for a long moment; then she said wearily:

"Please take me home now."

Rathbone started the car without another word and drove silently back through the quiet lanes.

They were at the cottage gate now, and Rathbone stopped the engine.

Diana moistened her dry lips.

"I suppose this is—good-bye?" she said faintly.

"Let us say good-night instead, Diana. Rathbone answered hoarsely. "In my heart you know I can never say good-bye to you."

She said with a sob: I don't want to be only in your heart. I want to be with you in real life. I want to feel your arms round me—to kiss you,

He did not move for a moment; then, almost roughly, he took her in his arms again, holding her silently, not speaking at all, just holding her, till after a long time he turned her face up to his.

He kissed her many times—on her eyes, her throat, her hair, and then once again on her lips, before very gently, he put her away.

She stood beside him at the gate, unable to speak, shaken to the depths of her being, her eyes raised to him in mute appeal; then suddenly she turned and fled up the little garden, sobbing as if her heart would break.

CHAPTER XIX

The following morning there was another letter from Mrs. Gladwyn telling Diana to get ready to return to London on Wednesday.

Wednesday! That is very soon, the Creature said. I shall miss you. "I shall miss you," she said quietly. But I suppose I shall have to go.

"By the way," she said as she left the table, "I can't find the frock you wore when you went away yesterday."

"No," Diana kept her eyes lowered "I changed at my aunt's house and left it there. It doesn't matter."

It gave her a queer little feeling to realize that in all probability her carelessly packed suitcase was now in Dennis Waterman's possession, because of course he would have sent for it as they had arranged.

And what are you going to do today? Miss Starling asked. I think it's going to be fine, by the look of it.

Diana glanced towards the window. I think Mr. Waterman will be coming presently," she said.

Miss Starling said, Oh—I see."

Children's Bedtime Story

By Norris Chambers

The Paradise Beyond

SERIES NO. 11

The baying of the hounds sounded closer; the sharp yaps echoing and reechoing throughout the ravines. King Wolf's heart leaped to his throat. Once before he had this terrible sound of hunt. He had seen his brother brought down by the hounds, and had escaped only by an accident. If any forest animal knew the terror that can be caused by the hunters and their dogs, it was King Wolf.

He longed for his home on Rocky Ledge, where he could be a ruler, and be safe and happy. Oh that he had known a few hours before what lay in that vast waste of nothingness to the West! It was too late now, he was surrounded.

Packs of terrible hounds had taken the place of the gay wolf packs in the days gone by. No longer did the wolves hunt in packs; no longer did they hunt all night and sleep all day; and no longer did they exist.

Now the first bound came in sight, it was running swiftly over a little knoll in the distance. It saw the wolf, and along mournful howl rang out across the landscape. It was taken up by dozens behind, and a few opposite the on-coming pack.

King Wolf made a quick dart down the mountain side. Never had he shown such speed. Not even in the gay old hunting days of the pack—He saw five hounds in front, heard several close behind, and sensed the presence of many on either side.

On and on he came until he was within five feet of the on-coming hounds, then with all his strength centered in one startling spring he flashed upward, soared over the hounds below, and hit the ground ten feet beyond never checking his dazzling gate.

On and on he plunged, forward, over the rough ground, the racing hounds close behind. Now he was running off the mountain, jumping chasms ten feet wide, and flinging himself over cliffs twenty feet high. Never had such progress been made over such rough ground. The hounds were gradually dropping off, and now only five pursued. They were running across an almost level stretch. A cliff was immediately beyond.

Slowly the hounds were gaining. Now they were in ten feet of the wolf, now eight, seven, five, four, and then three. It seemed as if they would make the final bound any minute. Then they reached the edge of the high cliff. Without looking King Wolf plunged off, hoping to elude his pursuers, and started the seventy-five foot fall to the valley below.

The hounds were too close to turn back, so they too plunged off. Down they fell, down to what King Wolf interpreted to be his doom. Then a changed, a lucky change, stole quietly upon the destiny of King Wolf. He would not die yet. A huge eagle had swooped down, and within fifteen feet of the ground it had come directly under the king. This broke his fall somewhat, and when he hit the high weeds below he was bounding over them; on the run again.

Only two hounds escaped uninjured, and hardly had the King started running than they were on his trail. Now he was running down the valley, parallel with slowly moving waters of the river, and he saw looming far ahead the timber line, if he could reach here he would be safe, for he had devised a plan of escape.

Now he was reaching the timber line, and with his sharp teeth he bit out a goodly piece, a piece long enough to supply his needs. Then the timber line across his receding path he quickly strung, and stood by with eager eye to view the working of his idea.

Then the pursuers reached the piece of timber line that he had stretched across the path, and they were running so fast they did not see it until they were upon it, and they bounced against it so hard that they turned five flips and broke their necks; so thus did King Wolf escape from the hounds.

Then he started at a run, and they say that he never stopped until he was safe in his great domain on Rocky Ledge. He has continued to rule over the simple-hearted forest-folk until the present, and never once has he thought longingly of his mountain home of yore.

BURKETT URGES PECAN GROWERS TO CONDUCT PRACTICAL RESEARCH

AUSTIN, TEXAS, June 2—While much advancement has been made in methods of pecan culture in the past ten years, scientific knowledge of that subject has thus far hardly become well started, according to J. H. Burkett, chief of the pecan division in the Department of Agriculture.

"Even though the day of believing that pecans grow better on hickory trees than native stock is past, 'we are still pioneering,' he said. 'Systematic improvement of the native pecan grove is, next to soil problems, the most fundamental question confronting pecan growers.'

Improvement of native pecan groves seems to offer quicker and more dependable returns than does the planting of new orchards, he said. Pecan growers were urged to conduct practical research in their groves along that line.

TEXANS TO REQUEST EXTENSION OF FARM AID FOR SOUTHWEST

Delegation in Washington This Week Seeks Continuance Of Federal Relief

AUSTIN, TEXAS, June 2nd—Requests for extension and liberalization of federal government relief for agriculture, especially applicable to the southwestern area, will be made by a delegation of leading agriculturists and industrialists of Texas and New Mexico who are in Washington this week.

The delegation consisted of John W. Carpenter of Dallas, John E. Owens of Dallas, Leon Goodman of Midland, A. P. Barrett of Fort Worth and J. E. McDonald, Texas Commissioner of Agriculture, who comprise the Governor's contact committee. In Washington they will join Col Albert T. Wood of Artesia, N. M., chairman of the contact committee of that state. The delegation represents the tri-state region of Texas, New Mexico and Arizona.

Continuance of the Dallas office of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for emergency crop loans and funds to be available for livestock financing in helping the cattlemen and farmer bring livestock and feed together are the principle objects sought by the delegation.

"We are firmly opposed to agriculture being cut off from the benefits of funds appropriated by Congress for relief as long as the finance corporation is helping other industries," Commissioner McDonald said. "We are asking no special favors but are insisting that agriculture be not discriminated against and that farmers receive just as much consideration and financial aid over just as long period as any other industry and commerce.

"If the tri-state region of Texas, New Mexico and Arizona is to receive from available funds a proportion relative to its livestock and agricultural production it is entitled to more than $12,000,000. To date it has borrowed only $4,000,000 and the other $8,000,000 is needed for emergencies and getting feed crops to livestock."

Encouraged by commendation given his back to the farm plan by prominent Texans during a recent trip to Dallas, where he conferred with leaders in preparation for the Washington trip, Commissioner McDonald said he would discuss the unemployment situation in the southwest with federal officials and urge a study and investigation of the plan to return unemployed in industrial centers to farms.

"By those who have studied and investigated it, the plan is being accepted as the most practical means by which unemployment may be permanently reduced," Commissioner McDonald said.

Proposed by the Commissioner last fall, the plan is being given an increasing amount of consideration and thought at the present time. The plan calls for a federal appropriation of funds for a revolving fund, which would be replenished by the issuance of currency based upon the bonds which, secured by property, would be given by the person established on a farm.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank all our friends and neighbors for the kindness shown and the many tender words of sympathy extended during our recent bereavement.

The wife and children of R. P. Odom.

"How Many Kinfolks"

Take the number of brothers you have, double it, add 3, multiply by 5, add the number of sisters, multiply by 10, add the number of living grand parents, subtract 150. The result will be the number of brothers, sisters and living grand parents. The first number will represent the number of brothers, the second the number of sisters and the third, the number of living grand parents. Remember this that if your result after subtracting 150 leaves you only two digits, add a cipher to the left, if result is only one digit, add two ciphers to the left. Read from left to right, the first digit is the number of brothers, the second, sisters, and the last grand parents. This game in a crowd of youngsters is always interesting, a bit exciting.

An invitation is being broadcast all over this section for citizens to come to Cisco next Thursday and enjoy a real vacation for a day. The pool will be opened Saturday. Girls to watch children in kiddies pools chaperoned dances.

CROSS PLAINS

on earth will you find so little poverty as here? Where else on earth will you find so little difference between the rich and poor as here? Speaking in the terms of Eastern civilization there are no rich here and no poor.

We have achieved the dreams of philosophers for thousands of years a city wherein the profits of capital and labor are being distributed more nearly in fairness than in any place in the world. In this young city built without class lines, without cruel contrasts we have a civilization that would have been deemed the mere vision of a dreamer thirty years ago. This is the peoples' town, and is being built by the sublime faith of the people in themselves. As we said before, Cross Plains was a city of dreams, and the dreams are coming true. The city of reality is a city of the people. But the dreams of the people are not disturbed by debts or bonds or mortgages. The dreams are not night mares. Cross Plains views her future and smiles.

COLDS COST BILLION ANNUALLY

The common, ordinary variety of colds cost this country a cool billion dollars every year, according to a statement made in Hygeia over the signature of Dr. James J. King. Statistics show that an average of one and a half days per worker are lost because of colds, making a total of 90,000,000 days or about $500,000,000. The added cost of medical care and the inefficiency following a cold will easily add up another half billion, says Dr. King.

Though the germ that causes colds has never been discovered microscopically, doctors have learned that it is omnipresent and it sets to work in the body whenever the resistance is low.

Plenty of rest, good food and sunshine are the best preventive measures.

Harry Heath returned to Cross Plains Sunday from Silver City.

Mrs. Tom Bryant spent the first of the week end in Fort Worth.

Elliott Bryant was in Oklahoma Wednesday and Thursday.

Lee Pierce of Dallas was in Cross Plains Monday.

PAINS QUIT COMING

"When I was a girl, I suffered periodically with terrible pains in my back and sides. Often I would bend almost double with the intense pain. This would last for hours and I could get no relief.

"I tried almost everything that was recommended to me, but found nothing that would help until I began taking Cardui. My mother thought it would be good for me, so she got a bottle of Cardui and started me taking it. I soon improved. The bad spells quit coming. I was soon in normal health."
