FIND ATOMIC FLAME WILL FUSE METALS

Hydrogen With Electric Arc Proves Success.

Schenectady, N. Y .- Methods of velding metal together will be revolutionized by two new inventions of the research laboratories of the General Electric company, for after years of search it is now possible to weld so that the fused metal is as strong and as ductile as if it were never in two pieces. Previous methods, using an arc to furnish the intense necessary heat, resulted in the formation of compounds of the metal with oxygen so that the weld was not as strong as the rest of the piece.

As the nitrogen and oxygen which unite with the metal come from the air, in these new processes the air is excluded when the weld is being made by a bath of hydrogen, water gas, wood alcohol vapor, and others which do not easily form metallic com-

Eight Hundred Volts Used.

One of the methods was developed by Dr. Irving Langmuir, assistant director of the Schenectady laboratory, and makes use of what he calls flames of atomic hydrogen, based on a discovery of Dr. R. W. Wood, professor of experimental physics at Johns Hopkins university. Electric currents of 20 amperes and at roltages ranging from 300 to 800, were passed through two tungsten rods so as to form an arc similar to the arc between carbon rods in a street arc light.

By passing a stream of hydrogen gas into the arc from a small tube, an intensely hot flame is produced, because the molecules of hydrogen are broken up by the temperature of the arc into their constituent atoms. As the ordinary form of hydrogen is that of molecules, the atoms almost immediately recombine, but in doing so they liberate great amounts of heat, about half again as much as the oxyhydrogen flame.

Iron rods an eighth of an inch in diameter melt within a few seconds when held about an inch above the arc, says Doctor Langmuir. Metals even harder to melt than iron, such as tungsten and molybdenum, one of the most refractory substances known, melt with ease. Quartz, however, melts with more difficulty than molybdenum, which Doctor Langmuir suggests as being due to the fact that the metals act as a catalyzer, or a substance which speeds up a chemical change. "The use of hydrogen under these conditions for melting metals has proved to have many advantages," Doctor Langmuir said. "Iron can be melted or welded without contamination by carbon, oxygen or nitrogen. Because of the powerful reducing action of the atomic hydrogen, alloys containing chromium, aluminum, silicon or manganese can be welded without fluxes or surface oxidation. The rapidity with which such metals as iron can be melted seems to exceed that of the oxyacetylene flame, so that the process promises to be particularly valuable for welding.

Another Method Found.

The other method of producing ductile welds was developed at the Thomson research laboratory of the Gen eral Electric company at Lynn, Mass. by Peter Alexander, independently of Doctor Langmuir's work. The electric arc is passed between the metal to be welded and an iron electrode, and the gaseous atmosphere is supplied in the form of a stream around the arc, so as to keep it entirely away from air. Pure hydrogen, water gas, methanol or wood alcohol vapor, or dry ammonia can be used, as well as a mixture of hydrogen and nitrogen. for it is found that the nitrogen is not harmful unless oxygen is also present, All of these mixtures contain hydrogen, and Doctor Langmuir suggests that this method also depends in part for its efficacy on the disintegration of hydrogen molecules into their atoms.

 Century-Old Cells

of Plant Found Alive

Philadelphia.-The discovery of plant cells that have lived and retained their individualities for more than a century was described to the American Philosophical society recently by Dr. Daniel T. MacDougal, director of the department of botanical research of the Carnegie Institute of Washington.

Most of the cells of trees die in a few years and their remains become part of the permanent woody structure. The ordinary cell of the living creature is supposed to disintegrate and become absorbed and replaced by other cells within a few years, although some biologists believe that brain cells endure throughout the life of the individual. It is difficult to account for the faculty of memory without supposing that the brain cells commonly live as long as their possessors, they say.

SEEKS TREASURE BURIED IN RIVERS

Would Salvage Ships Lost in Northwest.

Miles City, Mont.—Treasures of lost ships, buried under the shifting sands of the Yellowstone and Missouri rivers, will be sought by Elmore Ellsworth Wenner, who has passed a quarter of a century gathering infornation as to their location and possibility of recovery.

In the skeletons of these treasure ships, Wenner believes, still remain quantities of the cargoes of priceless pelts, gold, silver, quicksilver and various other merchandise, the value of which government reports indicate to approximate $50,000,000. A portion of the cargo of one wreck, buried for 30 years, Wenner already has salvaged.

Steamboating on the northern waters of the Missouri river began 103 years ago, when a fleet of six river steamers were built under government contract for use with the illfated Yellowstone military expedition which had as its object the establishment of a fortified post at the mouth of the Yellowstone river.

One of these, the Thomas Jefferson, provided the first Missouri river wreck near the mouth of the Yellowstone. In 1831 the American Fur company started a fleet of steamboats on the Missouri. Its George Washington struck a snag below Council Bluffs, Iowa, and went down.

The Assiniboine, also owned by this company, was grounded in 1825 near the present site of Bismarck, N. D., with a cargo of 1,185 packs of pelts and robes.

The Pontiac went down with a car go of 500 barrels of whisky, 500 casks of wine and 500 casks of brandy, none of which ever was recovered. The Louisville, loaded with whisky, quicksilver and general stores, went down 40 miles below Sioux City. At this same spot are eight other sunken steamers.

Courtship of 44 Years

Ends With Wedding Philadelphia.—A courtship begun 44 ears ago came to an end when Albert . Gardner, sixty-eight years old, married Miss Leona L. Gibbs, sixty-one years old, in St. Matthew's Episcopal church, where he has been the organist for more than half a century.

Rev. C Herbert Reese, the rector, performed the reremony, which was witnessed by the members of the choir and vestry and a few close friends.

Miss Gibbs met her husband 44 years ago, when she came to Phildelphia from Vincentown, N. J., and while it was a case of love at first sight, there were many financial dificulties in the way of their marriage. While he was undertaking to rear and care for a nephew, she was burdened with the care of two invalid sisters, the last of whom died a month ago All domestic obstacles being removed with an increase in salary for Mr Gardner in view, the couple decided to consummate their long courtship. They are living at the southeast corner of Twentieth and Brown streets.

GREAT RIVER WILL ATTEMPT COMEBACK

St. Paul-New Orleans Barge Line Planned.

Moline, Ill .- Is the Mississippi river to stage a comeback?

With the assured operation of a barge line on a six-day schedule between St. Louis and Minneapolis, following the great success of the federal barge line for several years past between St. Louis and New Orleans, there appears to be a new and brighter day dawning for the "Father of Waters," at least from a freight standpoint.

An agreement, reached after a se ries of conferences between Minneapolis and St. Paul business men and Secretary of War Davis and Gen. T. Q. Ashburn of the Inland Waterways corporation, means that the government will supplement the $600,000 subscribed by the upper river cities to the extent necessary to provide adequate transportation service above St Louis.

At the outset the equipment will include three boats of 600 horsepower each, 132 feet in length, 32 feet beam and a mean draft with fuel of 3 feet 6 inches. There will also be fifteen steel barges of 400 to 500 tons capacity each

This fleet will insure sailings six days of the week, connecting at St. Louis with the Mississippi-Warrior

Bids will be opened in time to permit construction during the coming year and starting of the service with he opening of navigation in the spring of 1927.

Channel to Be Deepened.

Some improvements of the river re planned. Forty-one miles of the channel between Moline and St. Louis will be deepened. In the Moline district of 658 miles, about 450 miles have a minimum depth of six feet at ow water. It is the purpose to deepen the remainder by either dredging or scouring before the new barge service opens.

There was a time when this artery of commerce was big with importance, both for the transportation of passengers and freight. A trip on the river was regarded as a treat. The cuisine of the lordly steamers was world renowned. And to add to the lure there was always the chance of a test of speed, sporting events of no mean importance.

Perhaps the most treasured memby of the veterans was the great race between the Natchez and the Robert E. Lee in 1870. These boats ranked with the largest and fastest craft on the river. The Natchez was built at Cincinnati and was commanded by Capt. T. P. Leathers. The Robert E. Lee was launched at New Albany just after the Civil war, John W. Cannon being in command.

There was the greatest rivalry between the two companies owning these boats and it was finally decided to arrange a race, purely for the purpose of determining speed superi-

Captain Cannon stripped the Lee for the race, removing all the upper works and rigging that could be dispensed with. He refused all business of any kind, and no passengers were

The race was to be upstream from New Orleans. On the afternoon of June 30 the Lee backed out from the levee and five minutes later the Natchez followed.

The Lee Wins Handily.

The entire nation watched the race with breathless interest. The telegraph reported the progress and the relative positions of the two craft at every point. At the principal cities of Natchez, Vicksburg, Helena and Memphis thousands assembled on the river banks to watch the flight of the river leviathans.

The Natchez lost, due to some ill luck in running into a fog bank north of Cairo, which caused a delay of six hours. Captain Cannon reached St. Louis with the Robert E. Lee an easy winner, his time being 3 days, 18 itours and 30 minutes.

With the passing of the river steamers also went the gamblers. The spirit of adventure was rampant in those romantic days. Large sums of money were carried by the planters. The betting spirit was rife, and the card sharks found rich pickings.

Shoe Styles Demand Attention; Lacy Frocks Are the Latest

cannot recall a time when styles in shoes received so much attention and thought as this season's footwear is getting. For several years women have been growing more and more discriminating and exacting in the matter of shoes, and the element of style in footwear has mounted in importance until what is chic for the feet takes as much consideration and heat and other practical things-gay. money as what is smart for the head. linger on oxfords and pumps-taking note of the tendency to light colors genial to them and it is just a quesand becoming cut, for shoes as well

ISAAC AND HIS WELLS

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 26:12-25.
GOLDEN TEXT—A soft answer turneth away wrath, but grievous words stir up anger.—Prov. 15:1.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Isaac Refuses to

JUNIOR TOPIC—Isaac Refuses to Quarrel.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Isaac the Peacemaker.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How to Deal With Aggressors.

Isaac was a child of the covenant and given in the time of the old age of Abraham and Sarah in fulfillment of God's promise (Gen. 15:1-5). His name means laughter, a reminder of the gladness of the heart of his mother when she learned that she was to have a son. As to character he was gentle, meek, meditative and peace loving. He was a remarkable contrast to his father Abraham. Two things may have affected him to his disad-

1. The shadow of his illustrious

Sons of great and rich men commonly do not make much of life. The necessity of struggle is not forced upon them.

2. He was brought up as the only child of his mother.

The tendency in such a case would be to shield him from the necessity of self-effort so that he would be unable to meet life's stern realities. Every child should be compelled to think for itself and to fight its own battles. While not a mighty man by nature's gifts, through the blessings of God's grace he became the inheritor of the covenant promise. He was not only a meek man, but a man of prayer as well (Gen. 24:63; 25:21; 26:23-25).

I. Isaac in Gerar (vv. 12-17). 1. The Lord appeared unto him (vv.

Because of famine in the land Isaac went into the country of the Philistines. This distress should have moved him to call upon the Lord (Jas. 5:13). It were better to suffer in the land than to go among the enemies of God's people. The Lord graciously appeared to him there and directed him not to go into Egypt, thus avoiding the error of his father.

2. His lapse (vv. 7-11). He sell into the same temptation as Abraham many years before (Gen. 20: 13). When one goes into the enemy's country he can expect to be tempted to do wrong.

3. His prosperity (vv. 12-17). Isaac did not intend to make Gerar his permanent place of abode. He intended only to sojourn there. While there he sowed and reaped bountifully. This prosperity was no proof that God approved of his course. H. Isaac's Enemies (vv. 18-22).

Isaac was not permitted long to enjoy this fruitful land. His prosper-Success in any calling in life will provoke envy. Ministers and Sunday school teachers sometimes become envious of each other. The Philistines ordered Isaac to leave them. Wherever envy has begun its deadly work there must be separation. They took as the method of getting rid of him the stopping up of the wells. Isaac did not contend with them but peaceably withdrew to another place where he proceeded again to dig the wells of his father. The Philistines again strove with him. He named this place Esek, which means contention, and again he removed from them. The second name he gave was Sitnah, which means enmity. This willingness to remove from the enemy shows his willingness to be imposed upon rather than to fight. The third time he dug wells there was no strife. The name given to this was Rehoboth, which means room. We should learn from his behavior that the way to have peace is to wear out our enemies with

III. Isaac in Beersheba (vv. 23-33). Immediately upon Isaac's going up from among the Philistines the Lord appeared to him. The Lord permits envy and strife in the world in order to get his children separated from them. Following this visitation by the Lord, Isaac built an altar and called upon His name. As soon as a meeting place with Jehovah was established he pitched his tent there. Following this his servants dug a well. No use going among the Philistines to get water. After Isaac was established in Beersheba, Abimelech came desiring to make an alliance with him. He gained influence by peaceably withdrawing from them. Being thus convinced they desired to enter into covenant relationship with him. The way to gain influence with the world is to with. draw from it.

If you want to buy a car on time

IT is to your advantage to buy the car that you can comfortably afford, on a payment plan that gives you a sure margin of safety.

General Motors has its own finance company, the General Motors Acceptance Corporation, operating the GMAC Plan. Through its service more than 1,000,000 families have purchased cars comfortably out of income.

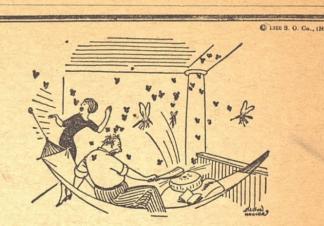

On August 1 last, the price of this service, which had always been low, was further reduced. And the automobile-buying public is now saving millions of dollars annually as a result of this reduction and the influence of General Motors' leadership.

The purchase of automobiles on time is a universally accepted practice. The car is a utility and it is sound business to conserve capital and use credit. But buy on sound terms and at low rates. Any General Motors dealer will explain the advantages of the GMAC Plan.

ing their enforcement. There are many archaic, obsolete and unnecessary laws on the statute books that might well be repealed." Woman Suffrage

Declaring himself an original supporter of woman suffrage, he said that all civil and political rights should inure to women that are possessed by men. "I would further protect and exempt woman from obligations that would bring unnecessary burdens upon the mother of the race," he added.

Prohibition

"A lifelong prohibitionist, I am against any plan, program or scheme that undertakes to restore the liquor traffic. And I favor the stern enforcement of the prohibition laws of the state and nation. No greater curse ever beset the human race than its arch-enemy, liquor."

Flood Control, Water Conservation

He advocated the protection of the people and their products in the river valleys of Texas against periodical overflows, by a system of levees and dams. Through a constructive program of flood control and water conservation by which the public welfare would be protected, he said, capital could be induced to make the waterways of Texas a great asset. The Farmer's Problem

Taking up the cudgel for the farmer, as he did in his previous campaign, the former lieutenant-governor asserted that upon the farmer's success depends the success, of all others, yet that no class of people in the land have less economic independence and enjoyment of life than the farner. As a remedy for his ills, cooperative marketing was suggested.

ills, cooperative marketing was suggested.

"There will be no cure for the farmer's problem so long as each individual farmer peddles his crop from door to door with a sample in his hands. There will be no cure so long as middlemen in skyscrapers in the cities tell the farmers of the country the priee they must take for their product; so long as these selfsame middlemen speculate and gamble on the product of the greatest and most important business in the nation—farming. A first essential to the success of producers is that they must control the sale of and regulate their output.

"The middleman can be jarred loose from his strangle hold upon the farmers when the farmers themselves, by some process, control and market 50 to 60 per cent of their output. It seems that cooperative marketing institutions are a nucleus around which a proper, effective and efficient selling organization can be established.

"As governor of Texas, it shall be my pur-than I."

"It was in labor's ranks I spent all the days of my minority." he recalled, "as well as many years of my majority. By the sweat of my brow, and in the rank and file of labor, I learned the lessons of life and carned its compensations. I experienced its financial difficulties far along in life, and no man has a more sympathetic understanding of its needs and necessities. Labor and capital have their controversies. "Good government holds the scales of justice even and weighs out a square deal to each."

State's Rights

Of all political and legislative activities, the candidate said he viewed none of them with more alarm as a destroyer of state's rights more alarm as a destroyer of state's rights than that class of legislation known as federal aid. Federal aid for post roads and public health might be justified, he granted, but in practically all other instances, aid offered by the federal government is "a financial sop that insidiously breaks down the rights of

MISS MORGAN

Synopsis .- Idly fishing Hermanos creek, in California, Caleb Warner, civil engineer, and a New Englander, is witness of the end of a coyote pulled down by two wolfhounds, urged on by a girl rider. Admiring the hounds, he introduces himself, and learns her name is Clinton. With western hospitality she invites him to the ranch to meet her father. At the Clinton home Warner learns his new friend's name is Betty. He is welcomed by her father, Southern Civil war veter-an and owner of Hermanos valthing of his ambitions and his feeling that he is destined to be a "Water-Bearer." In the town of Golden Warner shares an apartment with his old Columbia college chum, Ted Baxter, care-free and somewhat dissipated youth, only child of his widowed mother, who controls the family fortune. At a club luncheon Bax-ter introduces Caleb to Wilbur Cox, leading business man and president of the water company which supplies the needs of Golden. He gives Cox an inkling of his ambitions, and Cox, impressed, invites him to dinner

5 The dinner was served in one of the private dining rooms of the club, known as the Red room. The guests were those of the luncheon, with the addition of young Cox and Caleb. It appeared that they had been in some conference that afternoon and that the dinner marked the end of satisfac tory arrangements. The talk was all of mutual interests. Big Business.

It appeared that the afternoon's conference had been called in connection with the threat of other Californian cities to wrest from Golden its supremacy as the metropolis of the Pacific coast. The great fire, following the earthquake, had given them opportunity to creep up in population and general progress. Los Angeles was the most formidable competitor, with Oakville, across the bay from Golden, once only thought of as a suburb of the peninsular city but now, as the actual terminal of transcontinental railroads that ended at deep water, an active rival.

With so small a party Caleb was in easy earshot of the conversation. His interests naturally centered on Wilbur Cox and they quickened at the mention of water supply.

"The board of public works will approve the plans for filling the mains with salt water from the bay in case of any big conflagration," said Cox. "That will not only obviate any repetition of disaster through the conduits breaking between here and the reservoirs, as they did in the quake, but will prove a saving."

Jack Cox turned back to Caleb.

"The governor insists that the vital thing the matter with Golden's growth is the question of adequate supply," he said in an undertone. "Naturally he concentrates on that point."

"Is there a shortage?" asked Caleb. "Likely to be, they tell me. Better quiz the governor if you're interested. He'll pour out information on that subject like a water-gate once he gets Here was food for thought. Water shortage meant water development. It might mean an opportunity.

"The government project will take years to put through," the host was saying. "Meantime we've got to get

"We're leaving that end of it to you, Cox," said Winton. "Conserving water, buying and selling water—at a profit is your business."

"A reasonable profit." 'And a reasonable dividend," capped

Winton with a dry smile. The dinner was not protracted. And it broke up completely. These men seemed all to have definite things to do even at the close of the day. The guests shook hands affably with Caleb. "An engineer? Intending to locate here? You'll find plenty to do." Such was the consensus of their greetings. The result was heartening. Out here in the West they seemed to accept a man as efficient until he proved himself otherwise, he decided. In the East it was different. A stranger would stay years on approval, almost under suspicion, until he made good. Jack Cox invited him to visit Imperial valley, as his guest, to see what had been done there and Caleb responded in kind to the cordiality and evident earnestness of the solicitation. But he had an idea-Baxter would have called it a hunch-that he would do well to stay in Golden for a while. And cultivate Cox. His Yankee mind suggested that here was a direct open-

He had breakfast alone in the apartment house dining room. It was Sunday. He thought of visiting El Nido but old custom precluded the idea of a Lord's day social call. He wondered if the public library would be open, thinking that he would like to read up the water history of Golden, of Oakville and Los Angeles, and then he remembered the card in his pocket. The club library should prove adequate. The Altruists was a literary as well as an artistic institution. So he walked down town, to find the place almost deserted. Everyone in Golden, it seemed, made the most of holidays out-of-There was no one in the library

The walls were lined high with books, well arranged, so that it was little trouble to find ran right through them and-you can what he wanted. Soon he was deep in the history of Golden, with a big map of the Bay region close beside him.

Caleb accepted eagerly. He had He went to bed early. Sometime in heard of the Crystal Springs dam, Its the night Baxter came home. "Do you mind waiting a few moments?" he asked. He pressed a desk button and a shrewd-appearing young chap entered whom Caleb rated as Cox's secretary.

"Send me a stenographer, Harry, will you?" asked Cox. "I have given you all you can handle and I want to get out some instructions on that cement matter. The stuff is far from standard or contract quality."

The stenographer entered, a girl, quiet, dressed in a dark business suit, deftly taking the dictation given her by Cox in a low, unhesitating voice. Cafeb, looking ever an engineering journal, hardly noticed her.

"Take this letter," said Cox, then turned to Caleb, as the girl changed a page in her notebook. "I find that Hinckley, our engineer in chief, is not coming in this morning. He will be at Crystal Springs tomorrow, so I am going to give you a letter to him. A car will be here for you in the morning at eight-thirty, if that suits you. I am sorry I cannot give the time to go with you myself."

It was said graciously, with a certain air of assurance that Cox would actually have gone with Caleb if he could have spared the day.

"Now, Miss Morgan," said-Cox, "To E. H. Hinckley, introducing Mr. Caleb Warner.'

The girl's poised pencil wavered for a second, while her face lifted and her eyes gazed wide at Caleb, then it dipped and automatically inscribed stenographic characters. They were blue eyes and the face one he had seen before. Where? The dress was more arranged, but there was no mistaking the features, the general expression, tartled from business calm to personal interest.

Miss Morgan was Baxter's "peach." the girl whose photograph now occupied one of the silver frames on Baxter's bureau. Baxter was home, asleep, the girl was on duty. There were shadows under her eyes but there was a flush in her cheeks as she stared at Caleb with an interrogation that was almost a challenge, before she bent to her work as Cox went on with the Caleb imagined what she was wondering. He had been mentioned to her by name by Baxter. She was trying to guess whether Baxter had done the same by her, whether Caleb had seen her photograph, what chance had brought him to the private office and her into it on the same occasion? Caleb's face showed nothing and, when the letter was ended, he was again reading the journal. Nor did he look up when the girl left at Cox's "that is all, Miss Morgan." He did not wish to embarrass the girl. What she did in her own time was, if it did not prove detrimental to her duties, her own affair-most certainly not his. She did not return. A few minutes later the secretary came quietly in with the letter of introduction which Cox read, signed, slid into its unsealed envelope and passed to Caleb.

Miss Morgan is evidently Baxter's "peach." A smart girl with

Esther

VASHTI had left her Persian throne, and no queen reigned in the palace, so a decree was sent out ordering all the fair maidens in the land to be brought to Ahasuerus, and out of the number Esther, a Jewish maiden of the tribe of Benjamin, the adopted daughter of Mordecai, was selected as Vashti's successor. No jewel placed in Esther's crown shone with a brighter luster than the star which sparkled brilliantly in her name. Esther, thou truly hast come in a very timely hour. Vashti brought to Ahasuerus a high conception of womanliness and an exceedingly fine strength of character. Esther, thou shalt bring more. Thou hast come in a very time-

The Jewish nation was about to suffer at the hands of Haman, the prime minister, who, having been angered at an insult which he attributed to Mordecai, decided to seek vengeance, and succeeded in securing from the king an order which commanded that on a certain day the entire Jewish race should be massacred. The news reached the ears of Mordecai, who abode near the residence of Queen Esther. He sought help from her hands and urged that she go at once to the king and intercede in behalf of her people. She consented to do this, but the task must be undertaken with great peril, for we read, 'Whosoever, whether man or woman, shall come unto the King into the inner court, who is not called, there is one law for him, that he be put to death, except those to whom the King shall hold out the golden scepter, that he may live." Esther was strong enough and high principled enough to run the risk, and she made her way into the presence of the king. There cruelty looked into the eyes of kindness and love; there fickleness saw into the depth of constancy; there wantoness beheld restrained and mastered emotion; there pride viewed humilty; there the debase in man saw the depth and height of a lofty womanly nature. Ah, what in that eventful hour appealed to Ahasuerus? What did he see in Esther that prompted him to touch her raven hair with the gorden scepter? Was it the royal robes she wore? Not that. Was it her beauty-fairest of the East? Far more than that. Ahasuerus saw in Esther a woman, and those womanly qualities for the time mastered his capricious and cruel nature. Thus do we behold a woman holding the balance of power which controls the golden scepters of the world's history. What are you going to do with Ahasuerus, Esther? All honor to Vashti-perhaps she could do no more, but in Esther's time the conditions were different. There is a battle to be won, not only the triumph of one's individual's righteousness, but the welfare of a nation is at stakeand thou, O woman, hast come for just such a time as this. Esther did not win by the method which Vashti demure, the blond hair less fancifully refused to adopt. She conquered by that power which infused into the life and heart of Ahasuerus those high ualities of her own nature. It was a crisis in the Jewish history. Esther won the victory. Mordecai was promoted to a place of authority next to

> There is a crisis in our own national conscience, and American womanhood must win. No charm could have brought victory to Esther at the court of Ahasuerus, especially if she came unbidden, except the high qualities of her womanly nature. This will alone raise the golden scepter. It is the only thing that will ever bring into the hands of womanhood those scepters of masculine strength and power, which will ever be a determinative force in the proper adjustment of our social and economic wrongs.

the king, and the Jewish nation was

The day is coming, if it has not already come, when every married woman will have to meet this questionwhat will I do with the man into whose hands I have placed my destiny; what shall I bring to him. A weak, dependent nature with no ambition other than to be admired, petted, and loved? Oh woman of this new and enlightened century, you have come for an allimportant hour, and it is your womanly character which holds the balance of power in the molding of a great national future. You have come into the life of today at an all-important time, even as Esther came into the life of the Jewish nation. What time? The time when social and economic wrongs are to be solved and mastered by your power to bring to yourself the touch of the golden scepter of masculine strength. What hour? An hour when a mother sends her son and daughter into the tasks of tomorrow with high ideals burning like beacon lights in their hearts. It is a woman's high prerogative to reincarnate herself into the life of the world through the life work of her husband and her child. What hour? An hour when there should be brought to the world's work that firm and well-balanced masculine strength atuned to the ideals which reflect the influence of Christian motherhood. The destinies of Christian civilization rest very largely in the bands of our American womanhood: for in the words of Goethe, "It is ever a woman's soul that leads us upward and on.' DASH, THE DOG

You must hear about the time that Dash, the dog, showed how really brave he was. It happened a long time ago. Dash was very timid. Yet he was 1

Now usually we think of Irish setters as being brave dogs and we think correctly. Dash came, too, from a very brave family of Irish setters. He was long and had red hair-and he could certainly run. In fact, the animals in the barnyard, near the house where Dash lived told him that was the only thing he could do, and Dash had felt much ashamed. Red Top, the Rooster, said: "Cock-a-doodle-do, you're a coward. "You run away, as the silly hens do. "Well, you're not so brave yourself," said Porky Pig, who was digging his feet in the soft mud. "I'm not a coward nor am I brave. I am just fine and lazy. It's all I want to be," ended Porky Pig.

"I'll do some very brave act this very day," said Dash, "and save somebody's life, or maybe two or three lives-it doesn't make any difference how many!"

Off he started in search of a brave adventure. He was ashamed of being called a coward, and ashamed because he really did feel afraid.

And he was still more ashamed for giving way to these feelings.

As he passed the farm house Dick and Dot, the two children of the farmer, ran out and Dash followed along, for he knew they were going for a walk.

He forgot all about searching for a tail every time Dick or Dot spoke to him, which was his way of saying he was enjoying himself!

He trotted along and sometimes went off on long scampers.

They walked through the fields and Dash bounded through the long grass. Just before they reached the woods they came to a high bank where below was a narrow stream.

Dick told Dot to follow his steps, but, alas and alack, she slipped on mossy stone and down, straight into the stream she fell.

Dick laughed because he thought that here the stream was not deepand he was waiting to hear Dot laugh at her ducking, too, when he saw Dash scramble down the bank and into the Dot's head appeared above the water and Dash, the former coward who always ran away, had grabbed her by the shoulder and was pulling her to the bank.

For with his dog's understanding he had known, somehow, she was in dan ger, and that it was deep there. When he got back to the farm and Dick had led Dot, dripping wet, into the house, the other animals wanted to know all that had happened.

But Dash hadn't a word to say.

He didn't even bark! He was just very thankful and happy. But when Da's daddy brought out a great big bone and said to Dash: "You're a great, fine, brave dog," the other animals understood and Dash was so pleased.

Never again was Dash afraid. His love for Dot had been greater than his fear and it had mastered his fear. From then on he had been brave and
