News From Congressman Larry Combest

Part of farm life, as I found out as a teenager, is digging postholes and stringing fence wire. Pounding the heavy posthole digger into the hard West Teas ground came to be a part of what my grandfather called "character builders." I suppose at the time, I only saw that fences needed mending and it was a part of my job in the family to pitch in. Now, each time I head home from Washington to discuss concerns with constituents, as I will in two weeks, the fence lines along the farm to market roads remind me of lessons from home.

Any farmer can tell you that the hard earth does not give way very easily, but it can teach a lot about life. You can learn about determination from repeatedly pounding and pulling the dirt to dig deeply and narrowly so each fencepost will stand firm. Without enough determination and digging, however any effort will be wasted because the fenceposts won't hold the tension of the fence wire. Dig the hole too widely, and besides spending too much effort, the post will wobble.

One can learn life's lessons of determination and focus without digging postholes, but that particular chore has the additional benefit of producing something immediately useful. After a day's work, you have a fence; years later, seeing fence lines could remind you of what you may have learned.

The tough turf of Washington demands determination and focus. Keeping in mind the lessons learned from home helps keep my personal compass set in the direction of folks back home. Then, frequent trips like next month's town hall meetings, as well as questionnaires, letters and phone calls serve as sort of a "gut check" on the direction of my voting record for you in Congress. On these trips home, I learn of your concerns and I can offer you my sense of how certain legislation could have a stake in your future.

Another lesson that digging postholes reminds me of is keeping on course. Out in the pastures, digging the spot for the next posthole depends on the position of the one before it. The direction of the fence line depends a lot on each step in the process. Keeping your sights set on where you have been and where you are going was an important lesson--the kind of "character builder" in digging postholes that my grandfather was teaching me to remember.

WTAMU Nursing Students Experience Rural Health Care

A real-life health care experience in a small, rural community is what nine students from West Texas A&M University's Division of Nursing are getting this summer.

The students are participating in the second year of the Rural Health Outreach program and are living and working in a health care facility in a rural area.

The program, which began last summer and will continue next summer, is a collaboration between the University, the South Plains Health Providers Organization, Inc. (SPHPO) and the Texas Department of Health (TDH). The program has goals of increasing the number of registered nurses working in rural communities, increasing access to health care in isolated areas and expanding primary health care services in rural areas.

"Rural care isn't emphasized at that many nursing schools," Dr. Joleen Walsh, head of the WTAMU Division of Nursing, said. "Many of our faculty members, however, come from small rural areas and include rural examples of health care in the regular program."

The student participants are selected on a competitive basis and receive academic credit for a nursing honors course. They also receive a stipend from SPHPO which pays for living expenses for the summer.

South Plains Health Providers Organization applied for and received the grant to fund the program. The largest part of the grant ($409,490) funds a graduate nurse practitioner program in which students who participate agree to work in a rural area once they complete their degrees.

The remaining $77,745 is designated to fund the Rural Health Outreach Program. The money is distributed over three summers to train 30 students in the program.

According to Walsh, students usually select their nursing specialty based on their most positive academic experience. "If we give them a good experience with this program, I think they will choose rural nursing as a career."

Students participating in the program are Nancy Akin, a junior from Amarillo, working with TDH in Hereford; Lou Behrendsen, a senior from Friona, working with TDH in Muleshoe; Tina Black, a senior from Amarillo, working with TDH in Shamrock; Kirsten Birkenfield, a senior from Nazareth, working with SPHPO in Dimmitt; Abe Brown, a senior from Amarillo, working with TDH in Borger; Bonnie Buecker, a senior from Happy, working with TDH in Tulia; Kristi Harden, a senior from Pampa, working with TDH in Pampa; Paul Lockman, a senior from Amarillo, working with SPHPO in Hereford; and Johnny Stansell, a senior from Fluvanna, working with TDH in Post.

"Most nursing students mistakenly consider rural health care uninteresting compared to the intensive-care setting of an urban medical complex," Rebecca Robinson, Rural Health Outreach instructor, said. "This program provides the students with a professional opportunity while hopefully showing them there is a life in a small town."

Christmas Trees On The South Plains

West Texas seems the least likely place to serve as Christmas tree headquarters for the South, but a Levelland family has turned a small family Christmas tree operation into a profitable business that brings visitors from across the state.

What began seven years ago with 500 seedlings on 1 1/2 acres has grown to a 12 acre operation consisting of 11,000 trees.

Gary Baccus, co-owner of the South Plains Christmas Tree Farm, hosted a tour for the Great Plains Agricultural Council forestry committee (Wednesday, July 14) during their annual meeting at Lubbock.

The Great Plains Agricultural Council is a joint alliance of land grant universities, several federal agencies and others involved in the economic and environmental productivity of the Plains. The Council was established to review and coordinate interagency programs in the plains region of the United States.

The South Plains Christmas Tree Farm grows the Afghan species of trees and is often challenged by the adverse weather conditions of the High Plains. Their operation has been set back a number of times due to sudden freezes which destroyed many trees and stunted their growth, Baccus said.

From planting to harvest, a four year growth is optimum for the trees, but five to seven years is more practical due to the weather conditions, said Baccus.

The care of the trees at the South Plains operation is minimal and entails applying little chemicals and using drip lines for irrigation. The drip lines supply a gallon of water per hour under each of the trees. The trees are generally not fertilized because of the lack of response seen, but they are sprayed continuously due to frequent reintroduction of pests," Baccus said.

The trees are sheared biannually and dyed with Greenzit because of the pines' tendency to yellow out in the winter.

The marketing approach of the farm is a choose and cut method that allows customers to pick their own trees and cut them down themselves. Baccus says this is a new concept for most West Texans and people usually want the farm to perform the actual cutting for them.

After the customer finds their tree, a tree shaker shakes the dust and dead needles from the trees and a bailer compresses the tree and puts netting on it. Each customer is also given a bag to put under their tree to catch the needles as they fall off. Baccus says these extra steps are important in customer satisfaction.

Prices for the trees range from 50 to 70 cents for seedlings to a base price of $6 per foot for each mature tree. Thus, "a seven foot tree might sell for around $40," said Baccus.

Baccus said advertisement for the farm usually consists of local radio spots, newspapers and fliers.

What seems to be a far-fetched idea to many local people has turned into a money-making venture for the Levelland family. In this, only their third year to sell trees, they have already managed to double their sales.

Bulk sales may be in the works for the future, but for the time being the South Plains Christmas Tree Farm is content with building their clientele and providing what they consider to be "the best Christmas trees this side of the border."

Lice

A common problem among children is head lice, which can be spread unknowingly. "Although many people mistakenly associate head lice with unhygienic conditions among the poor, in reality they are seen in all social classes," said Charlotte Wheeler, R.N., C.I.C., infection control nurse at Methodist Hospital.

Kinds of Lice

There are many kinds of lice, but each kind feeds on a single kind of host. Human lice can establish and maintain themselves only on humans. There are three different kinds of human lice, but the most common is the head louse, Pediculus humanus capitis.

How Lice Are Acquired

Lice are acquired through close, personal contact. They also can be acquired through sharing personal articles, such as hair accessories, hat, headband and curlers. Lice do not survive for 48 hours away from the human body because they have to feed every three to six hours.

Symptoms

Head lice leave red spots that cause severe itching, which is the first major symptom. Most infestations are confined to the scalp, hair, although sometimes the lice may be in the eyebrows and lashes. The lice are large enough to be seen, as are the nits (eggs), which appear as tiny white sacs firmly glued to a hair shaft.

Best Cure

The lice are easily cured with a special shampoo which should be applied as directed. A second application may be needed in about 10 days to destroy any remaining lice. The nits should be combed out with a metal or fine-toothed comb. Bed clothing, caps, combs, brushes and other items should be washed in hot soapy water. Children should be kept home from school until at least the first treatment is completed.

Mrs. Lucille Smith was dismissed from Methodist Hospital in Lubbock Tuesday and admitted to the Knights Nursing Home in Littlefield. Her room no. is 7. She would be proud to see her friends I am sure.

Shannon Blackstone from Arlington was here on the weekend to attend her 1983 class reunion at Morton. She also visited her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Blackstone. Another daughter Mrs. Nancy Peace of Friona and her daughter Jaclyn also visited with them.

Our advice to you this week is to take care of your heart, and live a while.

Get Kids "Fit" For Their Future—Begin At Preschool Age

When should parents start getting their kids fit for the future? Today's child development experts agree that physical activity should be introduced to children in early preschool years.

"Today, when fewer than one-third of America's children are physically fit and childhood obesity is on the rise, parents of young preschoolers, ages 3 to 5, should ensure that regular activity is part of their family lifestyle," says Dr. Judith Young, executive director of the National Association for Sport and Physical Education (NASPE). Children will gravitate toward a healthier, more active lifestyle if they are exposed to stimulating, movement-oriented environments when they're toddlers, reports Dr. Young, who recently, along with KinderCare Learning Centers, the nation's largest child care company, developed the first developmentally-appropriate movement videos and classroom activities for children ages 3 to 5.

The videos, entitled Let's Move, Let's Play!, are being integrated into KinderCare's educational program for over 120,000 children nationwide, and are available to parents and early childhood educators for purchase by calling NASPE at (800) 321-0789.

According to Dr. Marcy Guddemi, vice president of education and research for KinderCare, "It's very important for parents to provide their child with a myriad of opportunities for developing an interest in physical activity." Dr. Guddemi recommends the following tips from the Let's Move, Let's Play! program to help parents motivate their children to enjoy physical activity, and build confidence in their movement potential:

- Schedule time throughout the week for family activities that encourage your child to enjoy physical fitness as part of a normal routine in his or her life. Take advantage of local resources, including parks and community centers; expose your children to a variety of activities, including dancing, walking, hiking, swimming, biking, etc.

- Create an inviting, "risk-free" area in your home where your child can enjoy safe, unrestricted movement activity. Encourage the use of music tapes and movement videos in this special movement area. (This will also help to limit your child's time watching television.)
- Bolster your child's interest in physical activity by encouraging him or her with recognition and praise for efforts and by joining in with him or her.
- Value your child's unique activity interests and abilities; avoid comparisons with other children.
- Be sure to emphasize the importance of having fun; avoid a push "to win."
- Children learn by example—if you enjoy and participate regularly in physical activity, so will your child.

Do You Have A Good Connection?

Former missionary Herbert Jackson tells the story of how on the mission field he was assigned a car with a problem--it would not start unless it was pushed.

Focus On Faith
Curtis Shelburne

But missionaries tend to be a resourceful lot. Jackson quickly devised several methods of starting his recalcitrant vehicle. Sometimes he would ask some of the schoolchildren from the nearby school to line up behind the car and push. On other occasions he would park on a hill and let gravity do the work, or, if a hill was not available, he would simply leave the engine running as he was making his rounds.

Two years and who-knows-how-many pushes later, when a new missionary came to replace him, Jackson dutifully explained the procedure to the new man who would inherit the stubborn machine, but before he finished the explanation, the new missionary piped up, "Dr. Jackson, it looks to me like the only problem is this loose cable." He proceeded to reattach the cable, turned the key, and, for the first time in two years, the engine roared to life--without a push.

The point Ernest B. Beevers made with this illustration in a recent issue of Leadership journal, is that the power was never really absent. Only the loose connection kept Jackson from utilizing the power that was available all along.

Loose connections of this sort can be a problem for all of us. For example, if Christians fail to "hook up" with the power of God unleashed by prayer, we've got a problem with a loose connection. James, in his Bible book, tells us pointedly, "You do not have, because you do not ask God" (4:2). He is saying, "The power is there, but you haven't made the connection and turned the key. You seem to prefer to push."

But James points us to a better alternative, one that benefits the whole body of Christ, when he says simply, "...pray for each other that you may be healed" (5:16). It sure beats pushing!

Using Trap Cropping As Means Of Pest Control

Controlling insects and other crop pests is a universal problem that doesn't always have an easy solution.

One of the disadvantages of applying pesticides is that many insects can develop resistance and soon the chemicals have little effect. In lab tests conducted in 1986, and 1987, at the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station (TAES) in Lubbock, the diamondback moth was found to be such an insect that has developed resistance to many different classes of insecticides.

In past years, the diamondback moth has been known as a minor pest of cabbage but within the last five years it has become a serious pest. In an effort to prevent damage from the diamondback moth, Dr. David Bender and other TAES researchers have developed a pesticide resistance management program for growers. Bender is an associate professor of vegetable production at TAES.

The program involves using a different pesticide each time the cabbage crop is sprayed. This practice, along with good sanitation, has helped to reduce the insect problem.

In a joint project with researchers at Oklahoma State, trap cropping is being studied in Lubbock as a means of reducing insecticide applications on cabbage as an alternative Bender is working with Dr. Pat Morrison, Texas Agricultural Extension Service entomologist, in their second year of research with the Indian mustard plant. Indian mustard is a black-seeded mustard used primarily in India for oilseed production, said Bender.

Because the United States is not the only place where diamondback moths are a problem, farmers in India have encountered the same resistance problems with this pest. However, implementation of a trap cropping program has helped reduce the problem in India.

"Researchers in India have experimented with using Indian mustard as a trap crop for the diamondback moth," Bender said. "The Indian mustard plant has proven to be attractive to the moth, luring 80 to 93 percent of the moth population to the alternate host."

"Scientists at the Indian Institute of Horticultural Research have found that by planting occasional rows of Indian mustard across a field of cabbage, insecticide applications can be reduced by about five-fold," he said. The insects can then be killed by spraying the mustard rather than the cabbage.

At TAES, Bender and Morrison are evaluating the results from India and conducting studies of their own to determine the success of the Indian mustard plant as a trap crop.

The plots of cabbage in the Lubbock field are interplanted with Indian mustard, said Bender. The mustard is planted first and after it emerges in seven to 10 days, cabbage is then planted.

The objective is to attract the diamondback moths to the mustard rather than the cabbage. However, in studies conducted last year at TAES, Bender said that the moths showed no more attraction for the Indian mustard than they did for the cabbage.

Although trap cropping with Indian mustard hasn't shown the same results as in India, the program has enabled TAES researchers to examine other cabbage insects. Researchers are monitoring other insect pests and obtaining base line data on when certain insects occur during the growing season, said Bender.

"Two other insects that infest cabbage (in the High Plains) are flea beetles and harlequin bugs," said Bender. "Flea beetles occur very early in the season and are not affected by the Indian mustard. However, the harlequin bugs were highly attracted to the mustard."

In planting rows of cabbage and Indian mustard side by side, harlequin bugs were abundant on the mustard but did not damage the cabbage. Bender said that when cabbage plots were not interplanted with Indian mustard, some damage from the harlequin bugs did occur. Thus, trap cropping could prove helpful in preventing harlequin bug damage.

In implementing trap cropping, crop producers do sacrifice a portion of land to plant the trap crop, but it could prove to be a better alternative than spraying an abundance of insecticides on the crops. It may not only save money, but also reduce insecticides released into the environment, said Bender.

Further evaluation will be required to determine whether or not Indian mustard can be used as a trap crop in Texas in the future. However, current research indicates that it does have potential for at least some important crop pests.

Mission Cable Rebuilds Local Cable System

Mission Cable has just recently completed the construction of their new cable system in Muleshoe. As a result of the construction, the television picture quality has been significantly improved, according to Jimmy Evans, Regional Manager.

"We are extremely pleased with the results," said Evans. "Many of our customers have commented on our improvements."

The construction, or "rebuild" as it is called, was completed in June and consisted of building a new upgraded cable system throughout the community. Once the new system was tested and operational, the old system was taken down.

During this rebuild process, some customers may have noticed occasional interruptions of service due to equipment testing and changeouts.

"We did our best to keep these interruptions at a minimum," said Evans, "and we'd like to thank all of our customers for their patience during this process. The end result is a better quality cable system that we are very pleased to offer our subscribers."

Letters should not exceed 300 words and must meet standards of good taste as well as legal guidelines. Letters attacking another person, a church or specific religion will not be published. Comments on issues are encouraged in order to maintain a forum for discussion of public views.

Texas Sun Induces Severe Dehydration

It's hot, it's muggy, and 98 degrees in the shade. The waterproof mascara and bright pink lipstick you painstakingly applied is slowing melting down your face. Welcome to the Gulf Coast hotbox otherwise known as Texas.

The Texas sun produces more than just an overabundance of sweat; it can induce severe dehydration and heat illness. But the great outdoors doesn't have to pose a health threat if we use common sense, says Dr. Robert Levine, internist at the Methodist Hospital in Houston.

"The average person requires about two and a half liters of water a day," says Levine. "During summer, that need goes up to three and a half or more liters a day or a little under eight, 8 ounce glasses of water."

As Levine defines it, "fluids come in many forms and flavors besides water, such as soft drinks, tea, coffee, milk, and fruit."

But, water, in whatever form, is the essential ingredient.

"Water maintains blood volume so that blood can be pumped to the heart, brain, lungs, and kidneys, and it helps keep the skin hydrated and supple," Levine points out. "We need water to get rid of the waste the body produces."

Heat illness is a serious possibility for people who don't drink enough fluids or over-exert themselves during the "Big Three" months--June, July, and August.

"The cardiovascular system helps dissipate heat, and cardiac output can double or even quadruple with heat stress," says Levine.

A heat illness can range from benign symptoms such as heat heart attack. Kidneys or liver may fail. Cardiac output can surge, which puts undo stress in the heart.

Levine says heat stroke primarily affects two groups: the elderly, who often keep their homes too warm and limit their fluid intake; and athletes, who work out or exercise without drinking enough fluids.

Senior citizens and those taking medications that inhibit the heart's response (some diuretics and antihistamines, for example) can be a tremendous disadvantage. They should check with a physician to see if their medicines need to be changed or their salt intake increased.

To avoid heat related illnesses, Levine offers the following tips:

- * Increase fluids in the summer months--especially when working, playing or exercising outdoors.
- * Listen to your body. If you start feeling weak, dizzy, or faint, it's time to go indoors. If you start feeling drained, it is often a sign of heat illness.
- * With your doctor's permission, liberalize your salt intake during the summer months to retain water.
- * Wear hats and cool, light, brightly colored clothing to reflect rather than absorb heat.
- * Take breaks from the heat. Go to a cool place, and literally, "chill out" for a few minutes. cramps, heat edema (swelling of the legs, for instance,) and heat syncope (flushing, nausea, fainting), to more extreme illnesses such as heat exhaustion and heat stroke.

When It Comes To Measuring Success At Work, Executives In New Survey Say No Other Factor Comes Close

The paycheck is unquestionably the yardstick by which employees evaluate their professional success, according to almost 60 percent of executives in a new survey. Personal satisfaction and job title finished a distant second and third.

The study was developed by Accountemps, the world's largest temporary staffing service for accounting, bookkeeping and information systems professionals. It was conducted by an independent research firm which polled 150 executives from the nation's 1,000 largest companies.

Executives were asked, "Which of the following best describes how most employees measure their professional success?" Their responses:

Monetary Compensation	59%
Personal Satisfaction	26%
Job Title	12%
Fringes and Perks	3%
	100%

"Salary seems to be the one standard measure by which employees feel they can gauge their success on the job," said Robert Half, founder of Accountemps. "Other factors are important, but employees and employers know these can be misleading. For instance, job titles can be artificially inflated or can vary substantially in significance from company to company."

Mr. Half also noted that there are various ways in which managers can enhance compensation for employees while at the same time increasing incentives. "Performance-based compensation, stock options and year-end bonuses can be very beneficial to employees

Big Dipper--Little Dipper It's All Dangerous

It doesn't matter if you're a big dipper or a little dipper, using smokeless tobacco is a dangerous habit that's hard to break.

"Smokeless tobacco that is kept in the mouth or chewed is more dangerous than a cigarette," says Cheryl Bressler, assistant head nurse of the Otolaryngology Intensive Care Unit at the Methodist Hospital in Houston.

Bressler has pioneered a local effort to educate people about the dangers of using smokeless tobacco. Her message may be startling to some, but not as shocking as the age of some of the "users" she's met. I've talked to a 6 year old boy who used it regularly," says Bressler, "so I now target elementary and middle school children."

Her message is straightforward. "Tobacco in any form is not good for you. Chewing or dipping tobacco may not cause any major health problems initially, but continued use of these tobacco products can cause cancer." And cancer is certainly a word even a first grader understands.

Bressler says smokeless tobacco contains larger amounts of cancer-causing chemicals found in cigarettes. These chemicals are absorbed through the mouth and stomach and stay in the bloodstream longer.

In fact, smokeless tobacco is one of the leading causes of oral cancer.

Each year, there are more than 30,000 new oral cancers detected in the United States and one third of those people die from their disease.

"If you look inside a dipper's mouth, you may see a white patch or sore where they keep the tobacco between their cheek and gum," Bressler explains. "The white patch, called leukoplakia, will be wrinkled, hardened, or cracked. In time, it could turn into cancer."

It doesn't take long for a dipper to discover the signs of danger. Leukoplakia usually develops after just a few months of use, so dippers should examine their mouth, lips, and tongue daily for warning signs.

Sores that bleed easily or don't heal, a sore throat, pain in chewing and swallowing food, or sore or red gums may signal something is wrong. If any of these signs are present, the dipper should see a doctor.

"Smokeless tobacco is dangerous and addictive," says Bressler. "I can't think of two better reasons to put that little tin can in the trash can."

The Methodist Hospital's Cancer Program is the third largest in Texas in terms of newly diagnosed patients seen each year.

(If you know of an organization, church group or school in the Houston area interested in hearing Cheryl Bressler's presentation, call 790-5066 to make an appointment.)

BETTER BUSINESS BUREAU REPORT

The BBB is proud to announce a new program for consumers sponsored by the South Plains Better Business Bureau Consumer Education Foundation. Consumers can be better-informed and savvy by joining the South Plains Information Network, called SPIN. As a member of SPIN, consumers will know more about protecting their investments, business/consumer relations and how to avoid becoming a victim of schemes and marketplace fraud. SPIN members will receive a monthly newsletter, a guide to charitable giving which is produced 4 times a year, a regular update of the South Plains Charity List, various mailouts directed for consumers, a BBB membership directory with all the updates; BBB Alerts which keep consumers alerted to schemes and unscrupulous operators, free copies of reports, discounts on Foundation-sponsored seminars and a direct, private line into the Bureau offices. If SPIN is for you, call the BBB at 763-0459 for more information or write to BBB/South Plains, 1206 14th St., Suite 901, Lubbock 79401.

Recently, your BBB has received inquiries concerning medical facilities charging interest and finance charges on their patient's accounts. According to information received from the Texas Medical Association, physicians are discouraged from harsh or commercial collection practices, but a physician who has experienced problems with delinquent accounts may properly choose to request that payment be made at the time of treatment or add interest or other reasonable financial or service charges. Under Texas law, medical services are expressly exempted from the requirements for retail installment sales. If you have been assessed interest or service charges on an unpaid medical bill and/or having trouble paying your medical bills, talk with the bookkeeper at the doctor's office or the doctor. Your doctor is more interested in practicing medicine, so they may possibly work with you in paying it out.

Conference Addresses Environmental Opportunities in Mexico

The Texas Department of Commerce, in cooperation with key public and private organizations from Mexico and the U.S., will host a one-day conference titled, "Environmental and Alternative Energy Opportunities in Mexico." The conference will be held on Tuesday August 17, at the Austin-Omnihotel, 7:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. This conference is targeted to small- and medium-sized companies seeking expansion opportunities in environmental and alternative energy markets in the Republic of Mexico.

The Mexican pollution control products and services market is expected to reach 20 percent per year through 1994. Currently, Mexican firms are seeking U.S. partners to acquire advanced technology in the environmental and alternative energy sectors. If NAFTA passes, Mexico will receive more than $5 billion in foreign investment in the environmental protection industry over the next three years. Now is the time for Texas firms to establish strategic alliances with Mexican firms and take advantage of these opportunities.

Conference panelists will provide practical and up-to-date information related to policy, enforcement, and marketing techniques. Texas companies in Mexico share experiences and knowledge about working with Mexican firms. At the workshop, attendees will have the opportunity to network with these representatives and learn ways to fund environmental and alternative energy projects in Mexico.

Mexican organizations participating in the conference include: the National Council of Ecological Industrialists; the Social Development Secretariat; the Federal Commission of Electricity-

-Alternative Energy; Radian de Mexico; and World Bank. Cospon-

GOLF *****

Greg Norman came out of the shadow of greatness with his British Open win. Bernard Langer spoke for many pros when he said Norman's last round at St. Andrews was the best golf he had ever seen played.

That, however, wasn't the big story for Americans. The big story was that of the final five or six contenders none was an American. Fred Couples tried, so did Tom Watson at first. But the rough course and playing conditions were too much this year for the Americans.

In recent years few major tournaments have been dominated, at the top, without an American or two in the lead pack.

Is American dominance on the wane? It could be. More Europeans are playing and Australia opens new courses every year. And there's no new Jack Nicklaus on the U.S. scene.

News From The Texas Agricultural Experiment Station

by Kathy Wood

The Nature Conservancy, which protects the environment by establishing private preserves, is changing its goals to meet the changing needs of society, a leader of that group told members of the Great Plains Agricultural Council Forestry Committee at its annual meeting.

Dr. Ben Brown of Albuquerque, a conservation expert for the conservancy, said it is building a partnership between the environment, the economy, and the community in order to meet these new needs of society.

The Nature Conservancy is a private, non-profit environmental preservation organization. One way they work to protect the environment is through their private preserve system. They have been committed to preserving the natural habitats for plants, animals and communities through fee acquisition. They solicit funds from private donors and purchase land to keep it from being cultivated or industrialized. Their efforts have been successful.

"We operate the largest private preserve system in the world. In the United States, we have protected over 6.5 million acres," said Brown. Of these lands, however, over 5.5 million have been passed on to more appropriate managers such as the Fish and Wildlife Service, the National Forest Service, and various state agencies.

"The conservancy has long preserved critical habitats through fee acquisition, but it became obvious that the long-term viability of elements of biological diversity was keyed to protection in an evolutionary context," Brown said. Undisturbed ecological systems were becoming impossible to find. According to Brown, "Few places are left that man has not disturbed."

Therefore the conservancy has made some innovative changes to their conservation efforts. It has initiated a three-headed partnership between biological diversity, appropriate sustainable economic development, and stable cultural and social institutions.

The partnership, according to Brown, "plans to seek to identify important systems, the stresses which act on those systems in a negative manner, the sources of those stresses, and the solutions to the problems of alleviating the stresses." These landscape-scale systems are termed "bioreerves." Bioreerves are usually centered around a cluster of elements of natural diversity that the conservancy has found are rare and worth preserving. These are places where the ecological process work without or virtually without human intervention.

"With these bioreerves we try to serve as a catalyst. We try to develop local capabilities for conserving and a local interest in doing the right thing for the landscape.

The conservancy accomplishes their goals with four steps. Identification is the first step. An established set of science programs helps tell the conservancy what needs the most attention or what is most threatened. Next, their state and national heritage programs every year produce prioritized lists of these sites.

In the third step, the site lists are given to the protection people who work in field offices of each state and are responsible for trying to safeguard these parcels of land. Finally, the conservancy manages the land and monitors the conservation restrictions to be followed by people involved in the stewardship program.

"The nature Conservancy patterned its system after the natural parks of the British Isles," Brown said. The British draw a "greenline" around an area and declare it a national park, but they do not evacuate human activity from the area. Brown said, "The people that are there can continue to practice appropriate farming or agricultural activity. They can even begin new agricultural or economic activity as long as it's compatible with the original purpose of the park. Human beings are very much an integral part of the management activity of the land."

One example of such a system is Big Darby Creek in Ohio. "It is a 556-square-mile watershed that feeds 80 miles of river-sized creek and is the healthiest, most diverse aquatic system of its size in the Midwest, as well as one of the best warm-water fish habitats in the country," said Brown.

He believes, however, that the water quality of the creek is "threatened by development in the watershed and poor agricultural practices." Brown said, "The importance of the Big Darby Creek watershed has inspired a conservation partnership among more than two dozen public and private organizations."

The partnership is working to protect the area's water quality while supporting the local economy, which is based primarily on farming. Brown said that reforestation of the corridor is essential; therefore, the conservancy has sponsored a volunteer effort that has resulted in the planting of thousands of native tree seedlings.

Another example of an effort by the Nature Conservancy to create an environmental partnership is the Gray Ranch Project in New Mexico on the Arizona/Mexico border. Brown is the director of this project.

The Gray Ranch is 502 square miles of the least fragmented and largest mountain island desert system on this side of the Mexican border. It is not completely untouched, but all the ecological processes work as they should.

Adjacent to the Gray Ranch is the Guadalupe Canyon which is owned and managed by a man who works with the conservancy to preserve the ecological systems on his land. He and his family have negotiated with Brown and the conservancy to establish a private operating foundation for the preservation of the Gray Ranch.

The foundation's goals are to protect the unique features of the Gray Ranch, to continue the Mexican established livestock culture, and to begin a community outreach program that works to preserve the culture of the southwest and that brings better health care to the people there. People are forced to move away because the nearest doctor is 220 miles from their homes.

The Nature Conservancy wants to maintain all the systems in these areas and similar ones through their partnership. Brown said, "We want to properly apply all these practices in order to restore a more natural structural mosaic."

Low Birth-Weight Babies May Be Eligible For SSI

"Low birth-weight babies may be eligible for Supplemental Security Income (SSI) benefits," said Bruce Wells, Social Security manager in Lubbock. "And being eligible for SSI usually means you are eligible for Medicaid."

SSI is a federal program that provides monthly benefits to individuals who are 65 or older, or blind, or have a disability and who don't own much or have a lot of income; and the program isn't just for adults.

"Generally, while the infant is in the hospital," notes Wells, "the parents' income is not counted and will not affect the baby's eligibility. However, if the baby is receiving SSI and is discharged to go home with his or her parents, the parents' income will be reviewed and may affect the baby's continuing eligibility for benefits."

For more information about low birth-weight babies and SSI, you can visit your nearest Social Security office or call the toll-free number, 1-800-772-1213 business days between 7:00 am and 7:00 pm.

Lightening Storms Warrant Precautions

PREVENTION

To help you prevent coming in contact with lightening the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration offers the following safety steps:

- * When a thunderstorm threatens, take shelter in a home or large building or inside an all-metal (not convertible) vehicle.

- * Inside a home, do not use a telephone, except for emergencies.

- * If outside, with no time to reach a safe building or an automobile, follow these rules:

- Do not stand under a natural lightening rod, such as a tall, isolated tree in an open area.

- Make sure you are not the tallest object on the landscape, such as in an open field, on the beach, fishing on a lake or standing on a hilltop.

- Do not stay in or near open water.

- Get away from tractors and other types of heavy equipment.

- Get away from other metal objects, such as bicycles, scooters, motorcycles and golf clubs. Golfers should also remember that golf shoes with metal spikes on the bottom can make them a prime target for a lightening strike.

- Get away from metallic pathways, such as fences, clotheslines, pipes and rails, which could carry electricity from some distance away to you.

- Avoid standing in small isolated sheds or other small structures in open areas.

- If in a forest, seek shelter in a low area under a thick growth of small trees. In an open area, go to a low place such as a ravine or valley, but be alert for flash floods.

- * If you feel your hair stand on end, lightening could strike within moments. Drop to the ground, bend forward and curl up in a ball with your hands on your knees. You want to make yourself as small a target as possible. Do not lie flat on the ground because you are more likely to be struck by lightening in this position.

LIGHTENING INJURIES

Victims of lightening strikes may be injured in three different ways. They may be directly hit by lightening discharge. They may receive a splash injury, which occurs when the lightening bolt seeking the path of least resistance, like from a tree to the human body. Or, if lightening strikes the open ground, a person walking or standing nearby may be injured.

"The medical consequences of a lightening strike include a large variety of injuries, depending on the exact circumstances of the accident," notes Dr. Couchman, who is also Assistant Professor of Family and Community Medicine at the Texas A&M University College of Medicine. Lightening victims may experience any combination of the following medical problems: arrhythmias (irregular heart-beats), tachycardia (an overly rapid heart beat) and cardiac arrest; impaired vision or even blindness; cataracts, months or even years after the incident; impaired hearing; and minor burns or a light "feathering" or redness of the skin.

In addition, victims may experience unconsciousness; seizures; paralysis; mental confusion or amnesia; blood vessel and muscle tissue damage; or broken bones if the victim falls to the ground or is thrown by the force of the lightening into other objects such as trees.

Psychologically, a victim may develop an intense fear of storms and loud noises. These fears can adversely affect the person's sense of security and also his ability to function and enjoy life.

"Of victims seriously injured, it is estimated that 20 to 30 percent die, and perhaps 70 percent suffer permanent damage," says Dr. Couchman.

FIRST AID

"If a lightening strike does occur, prompt attention should be directed to the victim's apparent injuries," he says. Remember, too, that although the victim has received a severe electrical shock and may be burned, his body does not carry any electrical charge. Therefore, others administering aid should not fear receiving a shock from handling the struck individual.

Lightening injuries should always be considered serious medical emergencies, even if the victim appears to feel fine. Therefore, call for an ambulance or EMS (Emergency Medical Services) unit immediately. While waiting for assistance, keep the victim warm and elevate his legs. Do not let the victim walk around. If the victim is unconscious, do not move him.

If several people have been struck, first tend to those victims who are unconscious and not breathing or who have no heartbeat. The reason is that those who are breathing (whether conscious or unconscious) will survive without your immediate attention. They will still, however, require medical attention as soon as possible. Victims who are unconscious and who are not breathing or have no pulse, however, require immediate mouth-to-mouth resuscitation (if not breathing) and/or cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) if they are to have any chance of surviving. "CPR should be initiated to anyone with apparent cardiopulmonary arrest, even if he has been unattended for several minutes, because there have been many reports of 'miraculous' recoveries from lightening-induced cardiac arrest," adds Dr. Couchman.

Travelling With The Texas Angler

Located on the Guadalupe River in the City of New Braunfels lies Lake Dunlap. Recently the fishing has improved, at least compared to this time last year. Not only good catches of catfish and crappie are being reported, but bass fishing is picking up as well.

Hydrilla is now growing in numerous areas of the lake along the river banks in water up to 10 feet deep. This grass is wonderful fish habitat for all species. It serves as additional cover for small and large fish. The water clarity around the hydrilla is unusually clear and fish of all sizes can be easily seen finding sanctuary in the new growth.

Fishermen are excited to see the hydrilla. Other reservoirs around the country that have great fishing have this type of vegetation. Just give Lake Dunlap a couple of years with hydrilla and look out, the fishing will be fabulous.

But there are problems that this hydrilla is causing. Some property owners are complaining that the hydrilla is limiting and even restricting access to their boat docks and some areas of the lake.

Texas Parks & Wildlife and the Guadalupe Blanco River Authority are aware of the problem and I've spoken to them about it. They are also aware that hydrilla is good for the fishery. The problem is how to make everyone happy. Fishermen don't want the hydrilla removed, and some property owners care nothing about fishing, and consequently don't want the vegetation.

Certain problems exist when you try to remove the hydrilla. First off, cost. Where will the money come from and how much will it cost? I've been told that funds would be needed to be raised from property owners because Texas Parks & Wildlife and

G.B.R.A. don't have funds for this project.

Only about 15-20 acres of hydrilla are in the lake. It is very spotty in most areas. Spraying of this grass with herbicides cannot guarantee it will get rid of it. Also herbicides are not selective, meaning any coontail grass or other underwater grass growing under the surface could be killed as well.

Because Dunlap is a river, the current makes it more difficult to precisely kill the grass. Even if the grass is successfully sprayed, it will regrow.

Also once herbicides are used, there cannot be any swimming for at least 24 hours. Fish caught during this time cannot be consumed for a period of 3 days. Signs would need to be posted and who would be responsible if a problem occurred?

There are many more problems that this space allows me to cover. Also, there are other solutions that would keep the hydrilla under control, such as mechanical harvesters. But once again, who will pay for this?

My opinion is that the hydrilla is here to stay and that if it restricts property owners access, then maybe they should physically remove the grass from those areas themselves. This is certainly the most logical and effective way to control the problem.

It would be nice if the fishermen and the upset landowners could come to an equitable agreement and resolve this problem. But I have a feeling that people being the way they are will work against each other instead of with each other.

EPA Cancels Registrations For Cotton Pesticide

The Environmental Protection Agency has accepted the requests of Elf Atochem North America of Philadelphia and Voluntary Purchasing Groups, Inc. (VPG) of Bonham, Texas to voluntarily cancel their registration for pesticide products containing arsenic acid used as a cotton desiccant.

The Texas Department of Agriculture is the state's lead agency for pesticide regulation working with EPA. TDA regulates all pesticides used in Texas and re-evaluates registrations as new data become available.

EPA granted the request of Elf Atochem and VPG to distribute and sell their existing stocks of arsenic acid for use on cotton until Oct. 31, 1993. Retailers and distributors may also sell and distribute the product until then. After Oct. 31, sale and distribution will be prohibited unless being sold or distributed as part of the registrants' buy-back program for purposes of disposal or relabeling. Growers will be permitted to use existing stocks until Dec. 31, 1993.

Elf Atochem will begin buying back products after Dec. 31, 1993 and continue its buy back program through March 31, 1994. By Feb. 1, 1994 VPG will notify customers that they can return leftover product to the company within 45 days from the notice date for a refund.

Cotton growers with questions can contact the TDA pesticide program at 512-463-7543, or the EPA pesticide program at 703-308-8033.

Screwworms Found In Mexico Again

Five positive cases of screwworms in cattle were confirmed this spring in Mexico, continuing the outbreak which began there more than a year ago. Screwworm eradication program officials were disappointed when the cases were confirmed in April, May and June. After six months with no cases, officials were hoping that the outbreak that began more than a year ago had finally subsided, said Dr. Cliff Hoelscher, entomologist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Four positive samples, the last on June 17, were collected from cattle near Panuco in the state of Vera Cruz, said Sofia Hernandez, speaking for the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service (APHIS) in Mexico City. The fifth case, also bovine, was found June 6 near Gonzalez, Tamaulipas, about 240 miles south of Brownsville. The last previous screwworm case had been reported on Sept. 30, 1992, in Tamaulipas. Since no more cases had been found during the winter, eradication program officials were "shocked" by the new ones, Hernandez said. "It's a bad turn for the program she added.

It's suspected that the pest overwintered in the wildlife population, Hoelscher said.

Sterile fly drops, which had ended in the Mexican states last April, have since resumed.

More than four million sterile flies are being dropped from airplanes into the infested areas to keep the outbreak under control.

The sterile flies disrupt the reproductive cycle on the insect. Ministry of Agriculture officials in Mexico City reported an outbreak of screwworms in the Isthmus of Tenuantepec area in southern Mexico on Jan. 17, 1992.

A total of 66 cases had been reported before the outbreak in recent months.

State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company Home Office Bloomington, Ill.

The screwworm and its flesh-eating larvae have been the scourge of the livestock industry for generations, accounting for million in annual losses in the United States during the 1950s and 1960s, Hoelscher said. Texas has not had an active screwworm case since August 1982. Warm, wet weather increases the possibility that the screwworm population could build quickly.

Texas ranchers are urged to treat all wounded animals and send in suspected samples for laboratory identification. Mailing kits for sending in samples of suspected larvae are available from most county Extension agents.

An Added Touch of Beauty

Robert Louis Stevenson said:

"The world is so full of a number of things, I'm sure we should all be as happy as kings."

God's world is filled with loveliness, but we need to add our own touch of beauty, so that we might be builders of a better world with Him. Each of us was given talents which would enable us to contribute to the world and mankind something great and lasting and beneficial. May each of us use these talents to the Glory of God. Add a touch of beauty to your life this week by attending church.

The Church is God's appointed agency in this world for spreading the knowledge of His love for man and of His demand for man to respond to that love by loving his neighbor. Without this grounding in the love of God, no government or society or way of life will long persevere and the freedoms which we hold so dear will inevitably perish. Therefore, even from a selfish point of view, one should support the Church for the sake of the welfare of himself and his family. Beyond that, however, every person should uphold and participate in the Church because it tells the truth about man's life, death and destiny; the truth which alone will set him free to live as a child of God.

(NAPS)—Easy to make, delicious to eat, bean-based recipes are a big hit with the health-conscious. Experts agree, beans are rich in protein, carbohydrates and vitamins and they're also a great source of energy.

Try these tasty bean dishes from the new Goya Foods bean cookbook. Beautiful Four-Bean Salad has been called an absolutely sensational work of art to eat, while Refried Beans can add a little bit of Mexican zip to mealtime.

BEAUTIFUL FOUR BEAN SALAD

- 1 can each, drained & rinsed:
 - Goya Red Kidney Beans
 - Goya White Kidney Beans
 - Goya Chick Peas
 - Goya Black Beans
- 1 cup chopped scallions
- 2 cloves garlic, crushed
- 1 tsp. dry mustard
- 3 tbsp. Goya Wine Vinegar
- 1/4 cup Goya Olive Oil
- 2 tsp. fresh dill, chopped

Garnish: sliced red onion rings.

In a very large bowl, combine beans with remaining ingredients. Toss gently until all ingredients are well coated. Cover and chill. Yield: 8 to 10 servings.

REFRIED BEANS

- 2 cans Goya Pinto Beans, drained
- 1/2 cup Goya Corn oil
- 2 tbsp. flour
- 2 large onions, chopped
- 2 large tomatoes, chopped
- 1 clove garlic, crushed
- 1 can hot chili peppers, minced
- 1 tsp. salt

Mash beans by hand or blender. Add corn oil. Add flour and stir until it begins to brown. Combine mashed beans with remaining ingredients, and add to skillet. Cook, stirring, until shortening is completely absorbed and the beans are fairly dry. Cool slightly and mold into a long roll. Yield: 4 to 6 servings.

For a copy of the Goya Bean Book, send one dollar and two labels from any Goya food product, plus your return address, to Bean Book, Goya Foods, Inc., 100 Seaview Drive, Dept. B, Seacaucus, NJ 07096.

INTS FOR OMEOWNERS

Pool Do's And Don'ts
(NAPS)—Do you take poolside matters into your own hands? If so, the following do's and don'ts can help you make your pool the splash of the neighborhood this season:

• Do begin each year with a new test kit and a fresh supply of pool chemicals.

• Do follow a regular testing routine. The key to healthy pool water is chemical balance. Maintain pool water components in the following ranges—pH: 7.2-7.8; chlorine: 1-3 parts per million (ppm); total alkalinity: 80-125 ppm; calcium hardness: 200-1,000 ppm; and stabilizer: 20-100 ppm—to keep water clean and clear.

• Do use a chlorine-based shock treatment once a week. It oxidizes (makes the water crystal clear by burning up any organic matter present in the water) and sanitizes (cleanses the water of any contaminants).

• Don't be fooled into thinking a strong chlorine odor means there's too much chlorine in your pool. The opposite is true—a strong chlorine odor indicates a pool filled with contaminants. Shock treating the pool destroys chloramines—contaminants that have reacted with chlorine—and eliminates odors.
