The very best reason for eating vegetables and fruits during their growing season is not their tempting quality. We need vegetables and fruits because they supply minerals and vitamins. But there is still another reason why vegetables and fruits are important in economy meals, which necessarily contain a high proportion of cereal foods. That is their value in maintaining an alkaline condition in the body. Some foods are acid-forming, some are alkaline-forming, some are neutral. The tissues and fluids of a normal body are slightly alkaline and should be kept so. Too much acid-forming food in proportion to the alkaline food we use has a tendency to upset the normal alkaline condition in the body. Too much alkaline food is also a mistake. To maintain the right condition, it is important to know which foods are which. Otherwise, we are almost certain to be misled as to acid-forming foods. As a rule, the acid-forming foods are meat, fish, poultry, and eggs are acid-forming. A good diet should provide you with enough alkaline-forming foods to balance your acid-forming foods at the same time enough kinds of food to furnish the carbohydrates, fats, proteins, minerals and vitamins you need to provide a balanced diet in the usual sense. It works out more simply than it sounds, says the bureau of home economics of the United States department of agriculture. Milk, the vegetables and the fruits, which are the main source of minerals and vitamins are nearly all alkaline in their reaction in the body. (In the case of exceptions are cranberries, prunes and some types of peas among the fruits and lentils among the vegetables. But not many others.) On the other hand, it is the acid-forming foods—breads and cereals, meat, fish, poultry and eggs—that are the main sources of carbohydrates and proteins. For both these reasons, the diet should contain plenty of milk, vegetables and fruits to maintain the tissues of the body in the normal alkaline condition.

OATMEAL YEAST BREAD AND OTHER USES FOR OATMEAL

Most people think of oatmeal as a winter food—hot breakfast porridge. But you can use oatmeal in many other ways, in dishes suitable for any time of year. In Scotland familiar oatmeal dishes are "brosie"—raw meal hastily mixed with boiling water or broth, "ban-nocks," or thick cakes of coarse oatmeal, and thin cakes of finer meal, "Haggis," another popular Scotch dish is a hash of oatmeal and chopped meat. In Ireland a favorite dish is "stir-about"—oatmeal and cornmeal cooked in boiling water, or whey and milk. The Norwegians have a thin cake called "flatbrod" made of ground oats, husks and all, mixed with barley meal and sometimes potatoes and peas, and baked on a griddle or frying pan.

Keep oatmeal in the containers in which purchased, or in thick paper bags or paper cartons. It does not keep well in air-tight containers. Quick-cooking brands simplify preparations. For bread making with yeast, some wheat must be added to oatmeal which lacks the gluten provided by the wheat. Oatmeal and wheat flour make delicious muffins, with a nutlike flavor. Molasses is used in a number of good oatmeal hot bread and cookie recipes. The following recipe for oatmeal yeast bread is from the bureau of home economics of the U. S. department of agriculture.

Two cups milk, 2 cups rolled oats, 2 tablespoons molasses or sugar, 2 tablespoons fat, 2 teaspoons salt, 1-4 cup lukewarm water, 1 cake compressed yeast, 5 cups sifted wheat flour.

Scald the milk, add the rolled oats, molasses, fat and salt. When cool, add the yeast, which has been softened in the water and the flour. Knead well working in a little more flour if necessary. Grease the surface of the dough cover and put in a warm place to rise. When double in bulk, knead again and put into greased bread pans. Cover, and when again doubled, bake at an even temperature about 375 degrees Fahrenheit for 45 to 50 minutes.

It has been estimated that more marriages take place during the third quarter of the year than in any other period.

To maintain the right balance, it is important to know which foods are which.

Otherwise, we are almost certain to be misled as to acid-forming foods. As a rule, the are not the acid-forming foods. The actual acid-forming foods are those which are high in protein. Such acid foods are meats, oranges and lemons. They are acid-forming but on the other hand, they produce an alkaline reaction in the body. This is true of all fruits and vegetables.

Under normal conditions, pure fats, like lard, and pure carbohydrates, such as highly refined sugar, are neutral in their reaction. Eggs and cereals, meat, fish, poultry and eggs are acid-forming. A good diet should provide you with enough alkaline-forming foods to balance your acid-forming foods at the same time enough kinds of food to furnish the carbohydrates, fats, proteins, minerals and vitamins you need to provide a balanced diet in the usual sense.

THE GOSPEL RECORDS

A Fourfold Record of Our Lord Jesus Christ.

By REV. SAM ROSING

The Records Compared. The Gospels are, no doubt, so-called from the first verse of Mark's Record. This title fittingly expresses the facts with which they abound—the good news concerning the Lord Jesus Christ. They depict Him for our instruction, in four different characters: life-size portraits of Him, we might call them, in four different views. And His biography would not be complete if one of these pictures was missing; for in them are wrapped up all that the Gospel proclaims. We need all four of them, not that we might harmonize and make them into one, as some ignorantly suggest, but that we may study the majestic, glorious Personage whom they set forth from every point of view, and get a right conception, a full-orbed vision of who He is, and what He has accomplished for God and man; for His person and His work of redemption demand this fourfold revelation.

As to the former, we see in Levitical offerings that there were four animal offerings, "Burnt, Peace Sin and Trespass offering," each typical of sacrifice of Christ on Calvary. He is seen in John's Gospel as the Burnt offering, wholly burnt to God, a sweet savor in His surrender to death, giving His life, when the due time came, no man taking it from Him. Luke gives us the "Peace-Offering" aspect of the cross, God and man brought together in fellowship, because of the shed blood. In Mark He is seen as the "Sin Offering," being made sin for us, and thereby atoning for sin; for which cause He is shut out of fellowship with God, so that He is made to cry out in agony, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" The remaining Gospel Matthew depicts Him as the "Trespass-Offering," making amends for the disobedience of Adam, by restoring man back to God, and thereby bearing our individual sins in His own body on the tree. Here too He is shut out of fellowship with God, for He is making atonement for trespass against the government of God and consequently in this aspect, His offering is not a sweet savor to God.

Many Christians have such a narrow and short-sighted view of all Scriptures that they continually apply everything to themselves and their interests. But to understand and rightly divide the Word of God, we must bear in mind the Holy Spirit's classification of the word—"the Jew, the Gentile and the Church of God" apply the truth to each in its right relation.

And furthermore, every book in the Bible, as well as the Gospels, has its own dominant truth, a truth which gives it force and individuality and with which all other truths connect and harmonize. The variety of the instruments, which the Lord has deigned to use, for this glad service, has hidden in some measure the true author; and despite the perfect unity of design manifested we little realize the marvelous manner in which each one has filled the place assigned to him.

But as to the Gospels themselves, which are our special theme at this moment: there are four, not by accident we are truly assured, but by divine wisdom. Four is the number of the world as the place of trial, of the four corners of the earth and four records in the scene of His "temptation," as He designates it, forcing the sins, the sorrows and the needs of men. He was not only heard and seen, but gazed upon and handled and verily found to be very God and very man. He was the Perfect Human; therefore, He is at the service of the human. As a living person is He revealed to us in the Gospels—made to walk and talk and live before us in an atmosphere of deification; yet He Himself is untainted and unchangeable. All other men upon the stage of the world are in contrast with Him; not excepting His disciples who followed Him, or His forerunner, John, who preceded Him.

And the divisions of these four Gospels into three and one, is also plainly evident as we meditate upon them. The first three, the number of manifestations, unite regardless of their difference, in one common view of the Lord—they emphasize His humanity in more or less degree; therefore they are more distinctly one, while John stands alone. He shows us Christ in His divine glory—the unique Eternal One, emphasizing His Deity. Therefore, we have the Trinity. Three in One, displayed in this setting forth of Christ in the Gospeils; for in Him dwelt all the fullness of the Godhead bodily. In the book of Revelation, chapter four, we have four cherubic figures, in and round about the judgment throne, which is set there up. They are given in order and numbered and the order agrees with the Gospels to which they apply—the first like a lion; the second like a calf (young ox); the third had the face of a man; and the fourth like a flying eagle." Here at once we realize the distinction between the first three, which are of the earth, and the fourth which is the bird of heaven, and answers clearly to the Gospel of John; the kneeling lion to Matthew, the laboring ox to Mark; and the face of a man to Luke, the Gospel of the Son of Man. The representation is most wonderful and will bear the most critical analysis. The figures of the cherubim were embroid-

Miss Bernice Wilmeth left Thursday for Galveston where she will enter the John Sealy College of Nursing. On her way she will visit her aunt, Mrs. J. F. Bateman of Fort Worth and her sister, Miss Marie Wilmeth, at Liberty.

Mrs. Will Crowder has been spending much time this week and last with her sister, Mrs. Arle Egger, of Ridge. Mrs. Egger's baby flame To win the Beloved as mine; All else I forego to be called by His name United in wedlock divine.

And have truly experienced the deep sweet fellowship which this implies. In so doing they have gained "the far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

Mark takes us further on. There is a greater degree of intimacy featured here. At the close, we see all the power of Satan, as annulled by Christ's death and resurrection, for He is seated at the right hand of the throne, working with His people, demonstrating His power in their behalf, and there will be a company of people, servants of Jehovah, followers of the Lamb, who will have the special characteristics that Mark sets forth. They have been occupied with Christ as the servant of men.

Luke features a greater unfolding. He shows us the prodigal son, brought home and reconciled to his father, loving much because much has been forgiven him. And this is representative of a deeper experience than the former Gospels portray. Such have an abiding assurance as to salvation. They know the Lord's provision for rest and peace and are partakers of His provisions. They will sing "Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne."—Rev. 7:10. They know Him as the good Shepherd.

Then John gives us another phase of God's salvation, deeper, richer, higher, fuller than those which the other Gospel writers unfold. He shows us what a great and glorious place the Son with the Son occupies. Here are portrayed glorious divine realities, which it is our privilege to appropriate; therefore some Christians will have the experience given us in this record and also there will be a company of such who will remain unto the coming of the Lord. There is no doubt are representative of the Bride, those nearest His heart, who have not been satisfied with anything short of His love; who have purposed as Paul to "win Christ" as their bridegroom. They have run after Him with all their ransomed powers, forgetting the things behind, counting as "dung" all the glory and pomp of the world, religious or otherwise. They have sung in reality

WHAT HAS HAPPENED
Abby Fane, beautiful night club singer, and Rodney Deane, son of Franklin Deane, a wealthy banker, are in love. Against the wishes of his family Rod marries Abby. The newspapers get the story and play up the fact that "The Night Club Singer Gets Her Man." This irritates Abby, for she really loves Rod. She is reading the newspaper headlines while on board the huge steamer that is to take the newlyweds on their honeymoon to Europe—first stop Paris. Rod, however, in his true love, soon washes her from the fear she has that he will ruin his life by marrying a night club entertainer.
NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY
Soon the huge steamer was in Paris and then came the thrilling honeymoon trip that carried Abby and Rod to gay Deauville and its sunny beaches; tiny Switzerland with its Alps and winter sports; Spain—warm with the roseate colors of romance, tradition and history—its hilltops, gallant fortifications, from country to country they skinned, enjoying the best that life had to offer—that the Deane money had to offer.
Then, New York again! The thrilling skyline of the great city rose to towering majestic heights, yet seemed like a fairyland of gold-tinted buildings, for the bright sun caught and held on window sills across the harbor.
And then the ship, with its snorting tugs pulling like terriers on leashes, was in the dock. The gangplank was dropped and the government officials took their various posts.
Abby, excited and happy, pinched Rod's arm. "Oh Rod, it's good to be home!" She laughed as a thought struck her. "Only we have not got a home, have we?"
Rod smiled. "We'll have one quicker than you think."
"Let's take a small apartment—not too big," Abby was enthusiastic.
"It's be fun to furnish it. I've got lot of ideas about my home. I've been saving them up a long time, you know." She pointed excitedly down to the pier. "Look! There's Sig—and Steve, too. Come on, Rod." She grabbed his arm and they made their way down the gangplank.
Steve reached them first. Abby took his two hands happily. "Steve! Gee, you were swell to come!"
Steve grinned and spoke warmly. "How are you, kid?"
Then Sig was there. Rod eagerly pumped his hand. Abby turned, her pretty smile diffusing the group with a happy radiance.
"And Sig! It was nice of you to meet us—"
Sig looked around. "Now if we can get through the Customs before evening—"
"You don't have to worry," said Steve, "that's all taken care of. He beckoned to someone at the Customs desk. "Hey, Mack, here's the folks I told you about—get them through, will you?"
"Okay, Mr. Walsh."
Rod grinned. "This is what it is to have influence."
"Uh—I'll see you later, folks—I." Steve was going to leave.
Abby pouted. "Don't go. I want you to have lunch with us."
"Sure!" Rod agreed.
"I'd like to, but I can't. I just came down to say hello. Nice to have you kids back. I'll be seeing you!"
"You bet, Steve and thanks!" Rod pumped his hand.
In a half hour, Abby, Rod and Sig were away from the pier. Twenty-five minutes after that and Sig was showing them through a huge, spacious pent-house apartment fitted beautifully in a quiet elegance that was only acquiescent with extravagant spending. A butler, maid and cook were waiting when the trio arrived.
The old homestead, folks. Decorated under my personal supervision." Sig waved his hand airily. He turned to the waiting butler. Here's the bride and groom, Alfred—"
"How are things, Alfred?" Rod smiled. "Nice to see you all again. This is my wife, Abby. This is Alfred, Mary and Christine."
Abby was shy. "How do you do?" Alfred bowed. "We're pleased you're back, Mrs. Deane."
"They've been in the family," said Rod, "for years." He turned to the butler. "How'd my mother come to let you go?"
"I think we're sort of a wedding present, sir."
"And now," said Sig. "I'll show you the house that Sig built."
"How's your rheumatism, Alfred?" Is it—"
"That," said Sig, pounding his hand decisively. "Is the thanks we artists get. Do you want to see

THE GOSPEL RECORDS

A Fourfold Record of Our Lord Jesus Christ.

By REV. SAM ROSING

The Records Compared.
The Gospels are, no doubt, so-called from the first verse of Mark's Record. This title fittingly expresses the facts with which they abound—the good news concerning the Lord Jesus Christ. They depict Him for our instruction, in four different characters: life-size portraits of Him, we might call them, in four different views. And His biography would not be complete if one of these pictures was missing; for in them are wrapped up all that the Gospel proclaims. We need all four of them, not that we might harmonize and make them into one, as some ignorantly suggest, but that we may study the majestic, glorious Personage whom they set forth from every point of view, and get a right conception, a full-orbed vision of who He is, and what He has accomplished for God and man; for His person and His work of redemption demand this four-fold revelation.

As to the former, we see in Levitical offerings that there were four animal offerings, "Burnt, Peace Sin and Trespass offering," each typical of sacrifice of Christ on Calvary. He is seen in John's Gospel as the Burnt offering, wholly burnt to God, a sweet savor in His surrender to death, giving His life, when the due time came, no man taking it from Him. Luke gives us the "Peace-Offering" aspect of the cross, God and man brought together in fellowship, because of the shed blood. In Mark He is seen as the "Sin Offering," being made sin for us, and thereby atoning for sin; for which cause He is shut out of fellowship with God, so that He is made to cry out in agony, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" The remaining Gospel, Matthew depicts Him as the "Trespass-Offering," making amends for the disobedience of Adam, by restoring man back to God, and thereby bearing our individual sins in His own body on the tree. Here too He is shut out of fellowship with God, for He is making atonement for trespass against the government of God and consequently in this aspect, His offering is not a sweet savor to God.

It was necessary that Christ meet all these different requirements of atonement. He could not possibly be excused from any part; therefore we have four views of the cross.
Then as to His Person, it was also necessary that we view Him from four sides; as King, Laborer, Man and God; and all of this is contained in these Gospel records, though we find the development and application of it afterwards.

And that there would be such development, the Lord Himself assures His disciples, "I have many things to say unto you, but ye are not able to bear them now; howbeit when He, the Spirit of Truth, is come, He will guide you into all the Truth. He shall glorify Me, for He shall receive of mine and shall show it unto you."—John 16: 12-14.

We see therefore how unwise men are, when they insist, all the truth in the words of the Lord Himself. As was said, the Lord plainly stated that there would be things uttered which He could not utter, but that here would be "His things." Thus the germinant truth which we find in the Gospels was but unfolded and developed by the apostles, who were thus qualified by the Holy Spirit for their special line. To the Apostle Paul was given the wonderful privilege to complete or fill up the Word of God.—Col. 1:25.
Therefore we must not expect to find in these records all the fullness of Christian doctrine, neither are we to limit them altogether to the expression of that which is distinctly Christian. Christ was "made of the seed of David, according to the flesh"; and this implies that "He was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God to confirm the promises made unto the Fathers."—Rom. 15:8. Thus we shall find in the study of the Gospels many Old Testament predictions to the nation of Israel and Christ in necessary association with this ancient people; by their unbelief they are not set aside. We cannot understand the Sermon on the Mount, the Olivet discourse and much else in the Gospels, without this be clearly apprehended.

Many Christians have such a narrow and short-sighted view of all Scriptures that they continually apply everything to themselves and their interests. But to understand and rightly divide the Word of God, we must bear in mind the Holy Spirit's classification of the word—"the Jew, the Gentile and the Church of God" apply the truth to each in its right relation.

And furthermore, every book in the Bible, as well as the Gospels, has its own dominant truth, a truth which gives it force and individuality and with which all other truths connect and harmonize. The variety of the instruments, which the Lord has designed to use, for this gladsome service, has hidden in some measure the true author; and despite the perfect unity of design manifested we little realize the marvelous manner in which each one has filled the place assigned to him.

But as to the Gospels themselves, which are our special theme at this moment; there are four, not by accident we are truly assured, but by divine wisdom. Four is the number of the world as the place of trial, of the four corners of the earth and four records in the scene of His "temptation," as He designates it, forcing the sins, the sorrows and the needs of men. He was not only heard and seen, but gazed upon and handled and verily found to be very God and very man. He was the Perfect Human; therefore, He is at the service of the human. As a living person is He revealed to us in the Gospels—made to walk and talk and live before us in an atmosphere of defilement; yet He Himself is unstained and unchangeable. All other men upon the stage of the world are in contrast with Him; not excepting His disciples who followed Him, or His forerunner, John, who preceded Him.

And the divisions of these four Gospels into three and one, is also plainly evident as we meditate upon them. The first three, the number of manifestations, unite regardless of their difference, in one common view of the Lord—they emphasize His humanity in more or less degree; therefore they are more distinctly one, while John stands alone. He shows us Christ in His divine glory—the unique Eternal One, emphasizing His Deity. Therefore, we have the Trinity. Three in One, displayed in this setting forth of Christ in the Gos-

Berry Boxes? They'll Hold Big Dam

No, these aren't berry boxes piled in rows. They are sections of the foundations for Boulder Dam, the government's $165,000,000 hydroelectric project on the Colorado river. The size of the foundation works, which are built of concrete and steel, may be gauged by the small figures of men working on their surfaces.

pels; for in Him dwelt all the fullness of the Godhead bodily.
In the book of Revelation, chapter four, we have four cherubic figures, in and round about the judgment throne, which is there set up. They are given in order and numbered and the order agrees with the Gospels to which they apply—"the first like a lion; the second like a calf (young ox); the third had the face of a man; and the fourth like a flying eagle." Here at once we realize the distinction between the first three, which are of the earth, and the fourth which is the bird of heaven, and answers clearly to the Gospel of John; the kingly lion to Matthew, the laboring ox to Mark; and the face of a man to Luke, the Gospel of the Son of Man. The representation is most wonderful and will bear the most critical analysis. The figures of the churbim were embrod-ered upon the veil of the holiest, which according to the Scriptures, was the "flesh" of Christ (Heb. 10:20); and in the tabernacle they were out of and of one piece with the mercy seat—Ex. 25:19. In their different forms they convey to us the characteristics of the government of God as administered by Christ and His people; for the latter are viewed as joined to Him in the throne as is plainly evident in these cherubic figures.

In these four Gospels there is an unfolding of nearness to God and relationship to Christ, which we believe is not without significance. We would emphasize it, for we believe it shadows the experience, in different degrees of the individual believer, as well as different ranks of the whole body of the redeemed.
In Matthew God appears as far off. The people are viewed, in some measure, as under the law; therefore are apparently at a distance from God. In the end the commandment is "to teach all nations, requiring them to observe all things, which have been commanded"—man still under responsibility. All power is vested in Christ, and is at man's disposal; but it is not seen demonstrated. Herein is illustrated the experience of a great many of God's children. They have never got very far away from Sinai's Mount. They like its fiery law and the judgments it features.
Mark takes us further on. There is a greater degree of intimacy featured here. At the close, we see all the power of Satan, as annulled by Christ's death and resurrection, for He is seated at the right hand of the throne, working with His people, demonstrating His power in their behalf, and there will be a company of people, servants of Jehovah, followers of the Lamb, who will have the special characteristics that Mark sets forth. They have been occupied with Christ as the servant of men.
Luke features a greater unfolding. He shows us the prodigal son, brought home and reconciled to his father, loving much because much has been forgiven him. And this is representative of a deeper experience than the former Gospels portray. Such have an abiding assurance as to salvation. They know the Lord's provision for rest and peace and are partakers of His provisions. They will sing "Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne."—Rev. 7:10. They know Him as the good Shepherd.
Then John gives us another phase of God's salvation, deeper, richer, higher, fuller than those which the other Gospel writers unfold. He shows us what a great and glorious place the Son with the Son occupies. Here are portrayed glorious divine realities, which it is our privilege to appropriate; therefore some Christians will have the experience given us in this record and also there will be a company of such who will remain unto the coming of the Lord. These no doubt are representative of the Bride, those nearest His heart, who have not been satisfied with anything short of His love; who have purposed as Paul to "win Christ" as their bridegroom. They have run after Him with all their ransomed powers, forgetting the things behind, counting as "dung" all the glory and pomp of the world, religious or otherwise. They have sung in reality

The court at Higham Ferrers, Northamptonshire, England, has not had a case of drunkenness for eight years.

A shotgun in the hands of Eldon McCormick, 18, his youthful brother-in-law, brought a halt to the career of Cecil (Pete) Thornbrugh, alleged outlaw, shown above in a hospital at Ottawa, Kan. McCormick shot Thornbrugh—sought by officers in Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri and Oklahoma—in a dispute arising from Thornbrugh's efforts to effect a reconciliation with his 17-year-old bride, Esther McCormick, who had left him.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED

Abby Fane, beautiful night club singer, and Rodney Deane, son of Franklin Deane, a wealthy banker, are in love. Against the wishes of his family Rod marries Abby. The newspapers get the story and play up the fact that "The Night Club Singer Gets Her Man." This irritates Abby, for she really loves Rod. She is reading the newspaper headlines while on board the huge steamer that is to take the newlyweds on their honeymoon to Europe—first stop Paris. Rod, however, in his true love, soon sways her from the fear she has that he will ruin his life by marrying a night club entertainer.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

Soon the huge steamer was in Paris and then came the thrilling honeymoon trip that carried Abby and Rod to gay Deauville and its sunny beaches; tiny Switzerland with its Alps and winter sports; Spain—warm with the rosette colors of romance, tradition and history—its hill-fights, gallant toradors. From country to country they skinned, enjoying the best that life had to offer—that the Deane money had to offer.

Then, New York again! The thrilling skyline of the great city rose to towering majestic heights yet seemed like a Fairyland of gold-tinted buildings, for the bright sun caught and held on window panes to blaze with shimmering glory across the harbor.

And then the ship, with its snorting tugs pulling like terriers on leashes, was in the dock. The baggage was dropped and the government officials took their various posts.

Abby, excited and happy, pinched Rod's arm. "Oh Rod, it's good to be home." She laughed as a thought struck her. "Only we have not got a home, have we?"

Rod smiled. "We'll have one together, won't you?"

"Let's hire a small apartment—not too big." Abby was enthusiastic. "It's fun to furnish it. I've got lot of ideas about my home. I've been saving them up a long time, you know." She pointed excitedly down to the pier.

"Look There's Sig—and Steve, too. Come on, Rod." She grabbed his arm and they made their way down the gangplank.

Steve reached them first. Abby took his two hands happily.

"Steve! Gee, you were swell to come!"

Steve grinned and spoke warmly. "How are you, kid?"

Then Sig was there. Rod eagerly pumped his hand. Abby turned,

"We Americans have a quaint custom with the glass and the elbow" (Posed by Gene Raymond, Carole Lombard and Monroe Owsley) her pretty smile diffusing the group with a happy radiance.

"And Sig! It was nice of you to meet us—"

Sig looked around. "Now if we can get through the Customs before evening—"

"You don't have to worry," said Steve, "that's all taken care of. He beckoned to someone at the Customs desk. "Hey, Mack, here's the folks I told you about—get them through, will you?"

"Okay, Mr. Walsh."

Rod grinned. "This is what it is to have influence."

"Uh—I'll see you later, folks—I—"

Abby pouted. "Don't go. I want you to have lunch with us."

"Sure!" Rod agreed.

"I'd like to, but I can't. I just came down to say hello. Nice to have you kids back. I'll be seeing you!"

"You bet, Steve and thanks!" Rod pumped his hand.

In a half hour, Abby, Rod and Sig were away from the pier. Twenty-five minutes after that and Sig was showing them through a huge, spacious pent-house apartment fitted beautifully in a quiet elegance that was only accomplished with extravagant spending. A butler, maid and cook were waiting when the trio arrived.

"The old homestead, folks. Decorated under my personal supervision." Sig waved his hand airily. He turned to the waiting butler. Here's the bride and groom, Alfred."

"How are things, Alfred?" Rod smiled. "Nice to see you all again. This is my wife, Abby; this is Alfred, Mary and Christine."

Abby was shy. "How do you do?"

Alfred bowed. "We're pleased you're back, Mrs. Deane."

"They've been in the family," said Rod, "for years." He turned to the butler. "How'd my mother come to let you go?"

"I think we're sort of a wedding present, sir."

"And now," said Sig, "I'll show you the house that Sig built."

"How's your rheumatism, Alfred?"

"That," said Sig, pounding his hand decisively. "Is the thanks we artists get. Do you want to see
