Getting Groomed

Wesley Taylor's calf gets plenty of attention while being groomed for the first Deaf Smith County 4-H bucket calf competition slated for Saturday at noon in the Bull Barn. The bucket calf projects are in conjunction with the Hereford Young Farmers Livestock Show which is being held this week. Hog judging is today at 5 p.m. and lambs will be shown Friday at 5 p.m.

Champ steers, broilers named

Showmen from Friona and Lazbuddie won the top trophies in four-county competition in the first day of judging at the Hereford Young Farmers Livestock Show being held through Saturday at the Bull Barn.

Dana Berend of Friona FFA took the trophy for the overall Grand Champion Steer and Sheldon Mason of Lazbuddie FFA was the top exhibitor of broilers.

Rickie Vogel of Deaf Smith County 4-H won the Reserve Grand Champion, Showmanship and County Grand Champion trophies in the steer contest.

Shane Mason, brother of the champion, won the Reserve Grand Champion trophy for broiler pens.

Chris Urbanczyk took the honor of Reserve County Grand Champion with his steer.

Hog judging is today at 5 p.m. and the lamb show starts at 5 p.m. Friday.

Complete results of the stock show, through tenth place will be in the Sunday Hereford Brand.

There's a good news from a survey on the use of drugs, alcohol and cigarettes by teens. Results compiled by the research team indicated all are on the decline.

Sponsored primarily by the National Institute on Drug Abuse, the survey involved approximately 17,000 high school seniors in about 140 public and private schools across the country. It covered statistical data from 1975 to 1985.

High on the list of good news is information that points to a gradual decline of illicit drug use since the peak years of 1976-79. The percentage of teens smoking marijuana regularly (20 or more times in the previous month) fell from 10.3 percent in 1979 to 4.9 percent last year. Almost nine out of 10 students said they disapprove of regular marijuana use.

Researchers underscore the fact that reduced demands, not availability or price, appear to be the key to declining marijuana use. The non-medical use of stimulants, sedatives and tranquilizers by high school seniors also sloped downward, according to the research.

Research also points to a drop in the use of alcohol since 1979 despite concern that its use would increase as illicit drug use declined. However, the downward trend on alcohol use is at a much slower pace.

The proportion of seniors reporting alcohol use in the prior 30-day period was 72 percent in 1979 and 67 percent in 1984. More importantly, the number of seniors drinking daily, or almost daily, fell from 7 percent to 5 percent over the same period.

Cigarette smoking, which had fallen by almost one-third between 1977-80, had leveled off for several years. But, in 1984 the number of smokers fell once again from 21.2 percent to 18.7 percent.

It's good news, but researchers warn against developing complacency in the battle against substance abuse.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans' personal income rose 1.4 percent in December, the biggest increase in almost two years, while personal spending shot up 2 percent, the fastest rate in more than a decade, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said the rise in personal consumption spending was its best performance since a 2.5 percent rise in May 1975.

While the big gain in spending outpaced the rise in income, the 1.4 percent earnings increase was still the best performance since a 1.5 percent rise in January 1984.

The report on personal finances served to underscore the fact that the economy staged a major revival in December.

The government earlier had reported that unemployment in December dipped to its lowest level since early 1980 while retail sales, industrial production and housing construction all posted big gains.

Economists are divided, however, over whether these economic barometers signal only a temporary upturn in the country's economic fortunes or mark the long-awaited revival from the sluggish growth the country has been mired in since the summer of 1984.

The Commerce Department reported Wednesday that economic growth, as measured by the gross national product, slipped to a 2.4 percent rate in the final three months of the year. Many analysts believe that accurately reflects the underlying strength in the economy.

Indian hotel blaze kills 38

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Flames and smoke raced through a 10-story luxury hotel before dawn today and officials said at least 38 people, including one American, were killed in the fire. Some plunged to their deaths from the second and third floors when they tried to escape.

A U.S. Embassy spokesman, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said a second American had been critically injured in the blaze at the Siddharth Continental Hotel. Police said the fire sent panicked guests to the windows to scream for help.

The hotel is owned by Siddharth Intercontinental Hotels Ltd. of India, and is not affiliated with the Worldwide Intercontinental chain. The United News of India news agency had identified the hotel as Intercontinental.

The U.S. Embassy spokesman declined to release the names of the Clerk awaits voter replies

Registered voters in Deaf Smith County who have not received a yellow registration notice in the mail should contact the county clerk's office.

"This is a chance for us and the voters to update their voter registration," said County Clerk David Ruland.

Every two years, the county sends out the notice card to revise records of address or name changes.

All persons of voting age must be registered 30 days prior to an election. The next election in Hereford is the primary election on May 3.

Democrats will vote in the usual precinct polling places and Republicans will cast ballots at La Plata Junior High.

"You can vote in any primary you choose," Ruland said. "But you can only vote in either the Republican or Democratic primary, you can not vote in both."

But, voting in party primaries does not bind a voter to vote that ticket in the general elections.

Commerce Department says

The Reagan administration, however, is confidently predicting that growth this year will hit 4 percent, well above the 2.3 percent turned in for all of 1985.

The more pessimistic economists point to the fact that Americans are now carrying record debt burdens and this is likely to cause them to slow their spending pace in coming months.

Since consumer spending accounts for two-thirds of GNP activity, such a slowdown would be a major drag on the economy.

For December, with spending rising faster than incomes, the personal savings rate dipped to 3.7 percent, down from 4.2 percent in November but still above the all-time low of 2.8 percent set in September.

For the year, the savings rate averaged 4.6 percent, the lowest since a 3.9 percent rate in 1949.

Seminar teaches farmers how to file bankruptcy

AMARILLO (AP) — Farmers concerned about mounting debts and the gloomy economic outlook facing the nation's agricultural industry gathered in this West Texas city to learn how to file for bankruptcy.

More than 200 farmers and ranchers from Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Kansas on Wednesday attended the Farm Crisis Seminar, which was sponsored by the Texas Department of Agriculture.

"A lot of you are not in financial straits, but are here trying to get information on a subject of interest to many," said Ronnie Walker, president of the Panhandle Bankruptcy Bar Association.

A former Crosby County farmer speaking at the seminar told troubled farmers they also can call the state's Farm Crisis Hotline, where they can get information on handling creditors and job retraining.

The hotline also can help someone find an attorney, financial counselor or mental health professional, said Nancille Gallimore, hotline administrator.

Mrs. Gallimore said there are 900 federal Farmers Home Administration delinquencies in the northern 25 counties of the Texas Panhandle, an average of 36 farmers per county.

"Bankruptcy isn't the end of the world. We filed bankruptcy and I'm still here," Mrs. Gallimore said.

She said she and her husband were farmers in Crosby County until 1984 when the "FmHA decided we'd learned all we needed to know about farming and they kicked us out."

"So when you call the hotline, feel sure we understand," Mrs. Gallimore said. "We've been there and we understand that you're scared. We know what you're going through."

"Most of all tell yourself 'What's happening in farming is not my fault,' and if you have to file bankruptcy, it's not the end of the world," she said.

Amarillo attorney Larry Sherman said filing for bankruptcy is fairly simple — it only requires that the individual sign a petition and file it in court.

"Immediately there is an automatic stay in place, or an injunction keeping creditors from repossessing, foreclosing upon, writing letters, suing or taking any action against you," Sherman said.

But Sherman said if a lease terminates on its own before bankruptcy is filed, the stay does not prevent the lessor from "booting you off the property."

He added that creditors can come in and try to get the stay lifted.

Tom Bunkley, another attorney, stressed that in all situations there is nothing black and white, and every case will differ.

Americans pending notification of their families. He said six other U.S. citizens registered at the hotel escaped injury.

A spokesman for CARE in New York said that Christopher Roesel, 37, of Alexandria, Va., a technical adviser stationed in the organization's Bangkok office, suffered smoke inhalation and was hospitalized. He was in serious condition but improving, said CARE spokesman Bill Dugan.

Five other CARE staffers who were at the hotel for a meeting escaped without injury, Dugan said.

Earlier, a U.S. Embassy spokeswoman had said only seven Americans were registered at the hotel, and that one, a woman she could not identify, had been injured.

Though no cause for the blaze was established, police and hotel personnel speculated an electrical short-circuit may have set a carpet afire in the hotel's ground-floor banquet room.

Survivors claimed no alarm was given and that the staff and fire department were poorly prepared for an evacuation.

New Delhi Lt. Gov. H.L. Kapur said 38 bodies had been recovered, of which 24 had been identified. Officials said about 70 people were hurt.

Grand Champion Steer

Dana Berend of the Friona FFA took the Grand Champion Steer trophy home from the Hereford Young Farmers Livestock Show on Wednesday evening. Her 1,285-lb. Limousin steer also helped her garner a second place showmanship award. Berend, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Berend, has been showing animals for seven years.

Reserve County Champ

Chris Urbanczyk, son of Mr. and Mrs. Tony Urbanczyk, had the county Reserve Grand Champion steer at the Hereford

Young Farmers Livestock Show on Wednesday. Urbanczyk exhibited through the Deaf Smith County 4-H Club.

Reserve and Showmanship

Rickie Vogel's 1,375-lb. steer was named the Reserve Grand Champion in four-county competition at the Hereford Young Farmers Livestock Show on Wednesday evening at the Bull Barn.

Vogel also netted the top showmanship honor in the steer contest and took the county championship. The Deaf Smith County 4-H'er is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Herb Vogel.

Tele-Help available

Responding to requests from business customers who desire a single, easy-to-use source of information, Southwestern Bell Telephone has produced a comprehensive booklet designed for small businesses.

"Tele-Help for Business Customers" contains information on 10 different subjects pertaining to changes in telephone service since the breakup of the Bell System in 1984.

"Business customers want simple, brief information about their telephone service," said Gary Stevens, Manager-Community Relations. "Tele-Help for Business Customers meets that need. And although the booklets were written primarily for smaller businesses, the information applies to large businesses, too."

Southwestern Bell Telephone began the Tele-Help program last year in an attempt to minimize customer confusion resulting from divestiture. No other regional company has such a program.

"Since Tele-Help started, we have made available to customers a total of 12 booklets concerning various aspects of residential and business telephone service," said Gary Stevens. "Throughout the five states served by Southwestern Bell Telephone, we have distributed 10 million copies. In Texas, we've distributed about five million copies of the English version and 1.2 million copies of the Spanish Tele-Help."

Gary Stevens said a recent survey of customers who ordered Tele-Help booklets showed an improved attitude toward divestiture.

"While those surveyed may not completely understand divestiture, they no longer fear it," said Gary Stevens. "That's what Tele-Help is all about, to increase understanding and decrease confusion."

Customers can obtain Tele-Help booklets by mailing coupons included in their telephone bill, or by calling 1-800-325-2686.

Broiler Pen Champ

Sheldon Mason, 14, was awarded the Grand Champion trophy for his pen of three broilers exhibited at the Hereford Young Farmers Livestock Show on Wednesday. Mason, a member of the Lazbuddie Future Farmers of America, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Darrell Mason.

City police arrest three

City police arrested three individuals Wednesday, one for shoplifting from Price Less and another on a warrant. An individual also was arrested in front of Hereford High School for fighting, resisting arrest and disorderly conduct.

Police heard additional reports of theft from a motor vehicle, assault, theft of a flute and case from Hereford High, harassing phone calls and two prowlers.

A cutting torch was taken from an Energas pickup valued at $87.

Gas line starts house fire

The Hereford Fire Department responded to a house fire Wednesday at 505 Schley just after 1 p.m. Damage to the house was estimated at several thousand dollars.

The fire started in the utility room when a gas line leading to a water heater broke.

Obesity, thinness inherited

By DANIEL Q. HANEY AP Science Writer

BOSTON (AP) — For millions of Americans cursed with tubby tummies and flabby thighs, science has some bad news: fat is in the genes.

But parents worried about their children who overeat can take heart — the youngsters are not necessarily destined to become chubby adults.

The results of a study of adopted children published today in the New England Journal of Medicine show that fat adults are likely to have fat children and skinny adults to have skinny children, even when they give up the youngsters at birth and have no contact with them.

The findings also show no apparent link between adoptive parents' physiques and the shapes of the children they raise.

Diet experts have long assumed that genetic inheritance plays at least some role in people's tendency to be overweight. But the new data cast doubt on another entrenched theory — that people are often obese because they learn bad eating habits as children.

"The real surprise is that the adoptive family has no impact at all, as far as we can tell," said the study's director, Dr. Albert J. Stunkard of the University of Pennsylvania. "I had certainly thought that early childhood eating habits have a lot to do with becoming fat. They may not."

The researchers cautioned, however, that people shouldn't use the data to conclude that dieting is futile.

"These findings do not mean that fatness, including obesity, is determined at conception and that, as in the case with determination of eye color, the environment has no effect," they wrote.

Stunkard noted that lots of people with two fat parents — the ones who probably face the highest genetic risk of obesity — take off weight and keep it off, overcoming their genetic tendencies to be fat.

"What has been shown here is that there is a strong genetic factor," said Dr. Jules Hirsch of Rockefeller University. "What isn't dealt with is: 'What has society done to permit the maximum uncovering of this gene?' Thanks to fast food and so on, the fullest impact of obesity is now visible as never before."

In an accompanying editorial in the journal, Dr. Theodore B. Van Itallie of St. Luke's-Roosevelt Hospital Center in New York said doctors shouldn't give up prescribing diets for overweight patients. Losing weight cuts fat people's risk of diabetes, high blood pressure, high blood cholesterol and some cancers.

Lower oil prices like a tax cut

By STEVEN P. ROSENFELD AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A sharp slide in crude oil prices promises a shot in the arm for the U.S. economy by creating jobs and putting more cash in consumers' pockets and corporate treasuries without fueling inflation.

Analysts say almost a million jobs could be created by increased economic growth and the typical American motorist could save more than $70 a year in gasoline for each $5 slide in the price of a barrel of oil.

Not everyone would benefit. Lower oil prices are bad news for the oil industry itself, companies and regions dependent on it and to oil-producing countries in the Third World.

But experts forecast that most oil producers, their suppliers and bankers could survive a sustained lower price for petroleum.

In markets where contracts for future delivery of oil are bought and sold, the price of a barrel of oil has plunged $5 in the past week and about $12 in the past two months.

In non-contract, or spot markets, major grades of U.S. and North Sea crude oil available on short notice both are hovering around $20 a barrel, a level last seen in 1979.

If the lower prices hold, and assuming the entire savings are passed on, the average price at the pump of all grades of gasoline could drop from $1.21 a gallon to $1.08 — a $70-a-year savings for the typical driver. Electric utility customers also would benefit, and trucking companies and airlines would see their fuel costs drop.

But unlike the pre-1981 days of federal controls on oil prices, savings no longer are automatically passed on.

Lower prices would have far-reaching implications. Petroleum is among the basic building blocks of the chemical industry, which uses it in fabrics, plastic grocery bags, tires, recordings and building materials.

Lower oil prices also would mean moderation in utility rates.

For the economy as a whole, growth would rise by an additional 2 percent within two years if oil fell to $20 a barrel, creating 900,000 new jobs, according to a study by Data Resources Inc., a consulting firm.

The most important impact of a drop in oil prices to the United States would be a reduction in the bill for imported oil, with each $5 a barrel drop chopping nearly $25 million a day from the nation's tab for foreign oil. That could cut $9 billion a year off the nation's trade deficit, which was closing in on $150 billion last year.

It was an explosion in oil prices in the 1970s that contributed to double-digit inflation and a crippling global economic slowdown.

Lower oil prices would, however, aggravate staggering debt problems for countries with no other major source of income, such as Mexico, Venezuela and Nigeria. Chances for collecting hundreds of billions of dollars in American and European bank loans to those nations fall in lockstep with the price of oil.

Editor's Note: Steven P. Rosenfeld has been reporting on oil economics for the AP since 1980.

Ann Landers Thinking is warped

DEAR ANN LANDERS: We need advice on what to do about my husband's 7-year-old son by a former marriage. John and I lived together for three years and have been married since 1983.

Junior was only 2 when his parents were separated. During these past four years we have developed a very stable relationship. He is with us twice a week for dinner and every other weekend. I noticed recently that Junior has been drawing away from me and "forgets" the hello and goodbye kisses. Finally his dad asked him why. The boy replied, "Mommy says whenever I kiss 'Louise' I stab knives into her heart. When I get home she always asks me, 'Did you stab any knives into mommy's heart today?'"

Should we stop the kisses so Junior can tell his mother he didn't stab any knives into his mother's heart? We want an affectionate relationship, but we don't wish to add to the boy's problems.—BLUE RIDGE COUNTRY WOE

DERA BLUE RIDGE: You must not allow your stepson's thinking to be warped by his manipulative mother. His father should explain that a kiss is a very personal thing and that when Junior kisses you it has nothing to do with his mother or anyone else.

If the boy shows signs of being depressed, I suggest counseling. He may need professional help to learn how to keep one foot in both camps without suffering from divided loyalties.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I've been married 34 years. Several days ago I noticed that the diamond had fallen out of my engagement ring. It's 1/2 carat. Luckily my husband found it on our bedroom floor.

I took it to a jeweler who has been in our town for at least 50 years. He has a good reputation. I asked him how I could be sure that I got my own diamond back when it was reset. He smiled and said I'd just have to trust him.

My diamond was set in a circle of white gold. The jeweler suggested resetting it on prongs to make the stone look larger.

When I got it back it looked fine. But after a week it didn't look like the same stone. Somehow it doesn't have the old sparkle. What do you think I should or can do?—A WISCONSIN READER

DEAR READER: It seems highly unlikely that a jeweler who has been in business for 50 years would switch stones on you—especially 1/2 carat. (That's worth about $450, assuring the stone is of fine quality.) If you are suspicious, however, take the ring to another jeweler and ask if what you now have is a real diamond or a phony.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: Our son broke his hand while wrestling with a friend. He is 13 years old, so I am not officially the mother of a teenager. God help me.

While we were in the doctor's office getting the cast on I saw a sign with the following message:

ATTENTION TEENAGERS: IF YOU ARE TIRED OF BEING HASSLED BY UNREASONABLE PARENTS, NOW IS THE TIME FOR ACTION. LEAVE HOME, AND PAY YOUR OWN WAY WHILE YOU STILL KNOW EVERYTHING!—A FAN IN FREMONT, CALIF.

DEAR CALIF.: Loved it! Thanks for sharing.

Ann Landers' booklet, "Sex and the Teenager," explains every aspect of sexual behavior—where to draw the line, how to say no, the various methods of contraception, the dangers of VD, the symptoms and where to get help. For a copy, send $2 and a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope P.O. Box 11995, Chicago, Ill. 60611.

Rebekah Lodge meets

Hereford Rebekah Lodge No. 228 met in regular session Tuesday evening with Noble Grand Kee Ruland presiding.

Sick members and friends were reported and a count of 22 visits and 20 cards was made.

Deputy Marshall Roberta Combs presented Gleissie Shelton to Lodge Deputy Leona Sowell for installation as vice-grand and Deputy Warden Lydia Hopson administered the obligation.

A love gift was sent to newly instituted Canton Rebekah Lodge No. 227.

Past Noble Grand, Ruland was the recipient of a past noble grand jewel and a large ceramic frog which she added to her collection.

Peggy Lemons served as hostess to Ruland, Combs, Hopson, Shelton, Verna Sowell, Susie Curtsinger, Dorothy Lundry, Edna Mathes, Sadie Shaw, Ann Conklin, Ada Hollabaugh, Helen Bishop, Wallace Shelton, Ben Conklin and Elmer Combs.

Anti-smoking techniques focus on the teenagers

Advocates of a smokefree society have chosen new weapons when teenagers are the target.

Health education has taught teens the potential dangers of cigarette smoking, yet 15 percent of teen-agers still smoked in 1982, according to William L. Winters, Jr., M.D., president of the Texas Affiliate of the American Heart Association.

Significantly, since 1977, more girls than boys are smoking cigarettes. Senior girls lead all groups of teen-agers with 20.5 percent of young women ages 17-18 smoking. In contrast, 16 percent of the boys in the senior class are smokers, but this number doubles to 38 percent by the time the young men reach age 24.

"We have explored why teen-agers begin smoking in the first place. Now we are looking at ways to combat their reasoning," Winters said. "Anti-smoking programs have come a long way in deterring smoking, but there is more work to be done."

According to researchers, most teen-agers now accept the fact that cigarette smoking is dangerous to their health, some to the extent that young children often 'lecture' their parents on the dangers of smoking. Yet, in later teen years, some of these youngsters begin to smoke.

Peer pressure is one common reason, according to Winters. Teens smoke because other teens smoke, because their parents or other significant adults smoke, or because advertising makes it attractive.

"There are other reasons. Teens are risk takers and smoking is one way they assert their independence," he said. "They know smoking is dangerous; they choose to take the risk, especially older teen-age women who feel a greater need to assert their independence."

Teen-agers are more "tuned in" to the present than the future, according to Winters. Smoking prevention programs focus heavily on the long-term effects, such as heart and lung disease, but adolescents are swayed more by the present consequences of behavior than the future consequences.

According to Winters, a more effective approach for persuading teen-agers not to smoke is focusing on the immediate drawbacks—eye and throat irritation, bad breath, tobacco stains and teeth and fingers, smoke odor which permeates clothing and hair, decreased athletic performance, rejection by non-smoking peers, and even the drain on spending money.

"Most teens believe that more of their peers smoke than actually do," he said. "Smoking is no longer a 'social entrance ticket' in many circles. As more and more adults stop smoking and as non-smokers push for anti-smoking legislation and policies, there is increasing support for teens who want to resist."

According to researchers, most teen-agers now accept the fact that cigarette smoking is dangerous to their health, some to the extent that young children often 'lecture' their parents on the dangers of smoking. Yet, in later teen years, some of these youngsters begin to smoke.

In Super Bowl by broadcasters

Little scoring predicted

By ED McHALE
Associated Press Writer
NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The television commentators for Sunday's Super Bowl don't expect to have a lot of scoring to talk about.

"I wouldn't be surprised to see a 7-3 score at halftime," said NFL Hall of Famer Merlin Olsen, who will be in the NBC broadcast booth with former Super Bowl quarterback Bob Griese and play-by-play man Dick Enberg.

"I've got a feeling it's going to be a low-scoring game," said Griese, a former All-Pro with the Miami Dolphins. "The Bears lead the league in shutouts and in fewest points given up and the Patriots have been doing so well."

"If it's a good game, I think it will be a low-scoring game," said Enberg, who will be working his third Super Bowl. "I figure 21-17 to be a low-scoring game. Ideally, I would like to see a 35-34 game."

Nevertheless, Enberg said a defensive struggle should not detract from what he called "an American celebration, an unannounced holiday."

NBC has projected that about 115 million Americans would see its live telecast. Millions more in 35 other nations will see a videotaped replay. The replay audience includes an unknown number of people in mainland China for the first time, ac-ording to Val Pinchbeck, the NFL's director of broadcasting.

NBC has 225 employees working this Super Bowl, 22 cameras assigned to the game, 14 instant replay machines and seven miles of cable snaking from the Louisiana Superdome to the NBC motor pool outside the big arena.

And for this Super Bowl, NBC is literally making much ado about nothing — as in the Blank Minute.

The premise is simple.

One hour into its 3 p.m., EST, pregame show, NBC will transmit a blank screen for a minute to let viewers go to the bathroom, pour a beer, thaw a TV dinner or whatever.

"It was meant as a smile, but it's received so much publicity," said Michael Weisman, NBC Sports' executive producer and creator of the Blank Minute.

It's costing NBC $1 million to send the Blank Minute, but Weisman called it a good investment. In fact, the Blank Minute is becoming more of a production.

NBC said the Blank Minute will start at 4:02. There will be a 20-second introduction, 52-second tease with a movie-style intermission sign on the screen — then nothing. No commercials. No film. No picture. If anything, Weisman said, maybe a clock.

That's because NBC figures people will be attracted by nothing.

Last NFL championship was in 1963

Bears' long wait is over

EDITOR'S NOTE — Joe Mooshil, AP sports writer in Chicago since 1954, covered the Chicago Bears' last NFL championship game in 1963 against the New York Giants. He's in New Orleans to cover the Bears in their first Super Bowl and reflects on the comparison between the 1963 and 1985 Bears.

By JOE MOOSHIL
AP Sports Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The long wait is over for the Chicago Bears. It has been 23 years since they last challenged for the National Football League championship. Little has changed.

They won the title in 1963 with a great defensive team and they reached the Super Bowl this season with another team that ranks No. 1 in defense.

"You win championships with defense," said Coach Mike Ditka, who was a tight end on the 1963 team that was coached by the Bears' late owner, George Halas.

"Every team is different every year," Ditka said. "The 1963 team was a great team. It was a great defensive team and we're a very great defensive team."

"But there are a lot of similarities. In 1963, the offense wasn't given the credit it deserved. It's the same with this team. The offense is not given the credit it deserves."

Ditka chuckled in recalling that the 1963 team had its cast of characters.

"There are characters on every championship team, whether it's Pittsburgh, Dallas or Green Bay," he said.

Where the 1963 team had such characters as Doug Atkins, Ed O'Bradovich, Rick Casares and a guy named Ditka, this crew has the likes of Steve McMichael, Jim McMahon and William "The Refrigerator" Perry.

There are also similarities in the head coaches. Like Halas, Ditka is intense, colorful and stern.

Unlike the 1985 edition which cruised to the divisional title and has not been seriously extended in the playoffs, the 1963 Bears had to go down to the final game of the season to qualify for the right to meet the New York Giants for the title.

It was defense that won it in 1963, and if the Bears are to whip the New England Patriots on Sunday the defense will have to do it again.

Atkins and O'Bradovich were the key men in the 1963 line. They were backed by a trio of linebackers as good as any the league had seen up to that time in Bill George, Joe Fortunato and Larry Morris.

Behind them were such defensive backs as Richie Petitbon, Bennie McCrae, Roosevelt Taylor and Dave Whitsell.

The 1963 Bears, like the 1985 team, lost only one game, 20-14 at San Francisco. There were 11 victories but two games ended in ties when the NFL did not have overtime.

The ties were both by 17-17 scores and came in successive games against Pittsburgh and Minnesota after a 26-7 victory over Green Bay on Nov. 17 which probably was the most important victory of that season prior to the championship game.

It was after the Green Bay triumph that Halas ran up and down the field with a clipboard in his hand crying, "This isn't a game plan; it's a war plan."

Sports briefs

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — New England guard Ron Wooten said the Patriots ceased being awed by Chicago's reputation when they saw the Bears coming into the Superdome on Tuesday.

"We saw them getting off the bus and we thought they'd have an 'S' on their chest. They didn't. They were limping the same way we were."

TEAMWORK

TEAMWORK noun a joint action by a group of people in which each person subordinates his individual interests and opinions for the unity of the group.

When the word "teamwork" is mentioned, the most obvious thought is that of football or another sport. While it is true that a football team must have unity, teamwork also applies to business.

If you have a financial need, you need a good bank on your team. You need a financial institution that understands your situation and that can help you complete your project.

McMahon receives acupuncture shot

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Hiroshi Shiriashi gave Jim McMahon his long-awaited shot in the rump — and the rest of the Chicago Bears a shot in the arm.

McMahon, the controversial quarterback who had complained long and loud about the Bears' unwillingness to supply him with his favorite acupuncturist, got his wish Wednesday.

Shiriashi, the trainer for the Japanese national track team, arrived in this Super Bowl city and administered a needle treatment in McMahon's sore left buttock. Shiriashi said he flew here at the request of his friend, former world-class sprinter Willie Gault, now a wide receiver for the Bears.

"I am here for him and to make his Bears feel better so they can win the Super Bowl," Shiriashi said. "My treatment is special, totally oriental. I am so happy to get here."

After the treatment, McMahon participated in a two-hour workout as the Bears continued preparation for Sunday's game against New England.

"The main thing I was impressed with was all of his movement," Coach Mike Ditka said after McMahon took most of the snaps in the Bears' first two offensive series. "He was 200 percent better today."

"I'm really optimistic now. Frankly, I was not very optimistic after yesterday's (Tuesday's) practice. It was a pleasant surprise for me."

The sidelines in the National Football League are out of bounds but the goal line is part of the end zone.

At 11 p.m., CST, McMahon was seen walking jauntily at the head of a parade of fans and celebrants down the middle of Bourbon Street. He showed no sign of discomfort as he moved through the famed French Quarter, stopping occasionally to chat with people.

Then, saying "curfew, gotta go," he headed, at a brisk pace, toward the Bears hotel.

At nearby Tulane University, the Patriots went through a 2 1/4-hour practice. Wide receiver Irving Fryar, who suffered a cut right little finger in a domestic misunderstanding with his wife and missed the AFC championship game against Miami, took part, catching several passes and fielding punts, a category in which he led the NFL.

Asked if he saw any difference in Fryar's performance because of the plastic splint he wore, Coach Raymond Berry replied, "I didn't see any difference, except that he has a bigger finger."

McMahon had been undergoing whirlpool, rubdown and sound-stimulation treatments under the direction of Fred Caito, the Bears' trainer, but wasn't satisfied.

"There's only so much he can do. That takes time and we don't have time," McMahon said.

He wanted Shiriashi. Finally, the Bears relented.

"With the all hype and the comments I hear, people assume it's a put-on," Ditka said of McMahon's injury prior to Wednesday's workout. "It's not a put-on. He's hurting right now. The degree of the hurt nobody knows but him because it's his body. But he's in a lot of pain."

"He'll get acupuncture treatment for the remainder of the week, and hopefully that will help him, or at least speed the recovery."

"We've had other people treated by acupuncture; it's nothing new," Ditka said. "He's treated other people. He's not part of our staff, but he has helped out."

Even before Shiriashi's arrival and McMahon's apparent improvement, Berry was laughing off the suggestion that the Bears' No. 1 quarterback might not start.

"Do I believe he's doubtful?" Berry said. "Is there some hope? I'm not taking this seriously. This is a week of a whole lot of words going on."

"It's still sore," McMahon said of his rump. "It's getting better, there's no question about that. But it's still not where I want it to be."

"I think the closer we get to game time and the adrenalin starts pumping, a lot of the pain will disappear. I'm sure I'm probably going to have some novacaine before the game."

McMahon's rear end, bruised when Los Angeles Rams linebacker Jim Collins applied his helmet to it during the NFC title game, has become the No. 1 subject of conversation. A close No. 2 is McMahon's headband collection.

NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle fined the Bears $5,000 after McMahon wore a headband with the "adidas" brand visible during Chicago's first playoff game, so McMahon wore one with "ROZELLE" hand-lettered across the front for the Rams' game. Rozelle headbands now sell for $5 around town.

Wall Street watches Super Bowl closely

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The old Wall Street maxim "nobody loves a bear" will be temporarily suspended this weekend in the realms of finance.

It seems that a victory by the Chicago Bears in professional football's Super Bowl on Sunday would be interpreted as a favorable portent for the stock market through the rest of 1986.

Conversely, an upset by the New England Patriots would be seen as a negative investment omen.

Those readings derive from the Super Bowl stock market indicator, a whimsical but widely publicized theory that has been developed by market analysts over the past several years.

As many investors know by now, this doctrine holds that a victory in the championship game by an original National Football League team (such as Chicago) foreshadows an up year for the stock market.

If a team (such as New England) that originated in the old pre-merger American Football League wins, then stock prices are supposed to be headed for a decline.

So on Sunday, in the words of William LeFevre at the investment firm of Purcell, Graham & Co., "the bulls will be rooting for the Bears."

Of course, no sane and sober student of financial matters puts any credence in this theory. It makes no common sense. Even the market commentators who publish explanations of it say they do so as an entertainment, a bit of comic relief in a business that can be very solemn.

Yet, perversely, the "indicator" keeps working, having proved accurate almost every year for the two decades since the first Super Bowl took place.

In 1985, the San Francisco 49ers from the original NFL beat the AFL-born Miami Dolphins. The stock market obliged by rolling up gains for the year of 25 percent to 30 percent, as measured by various market averages.

A year before that the Los Angeles Raiders, who began life in Oakland with the old AFL, trounced the Washington Redskins 38-9, for the most one-sided score ever in the Super Bowl.

Come Monday morning after the game, an amazed broker in New York reported receiving anxious calls from investors inquiring whether the margin of victory was as significant for the market outlook as the pedigree of the winner.

The broker assured the callers that football results in no way influenced his view of the market outlook. As it turned out, the investors had no cause for great alarm anyway.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials finished 1984 with a loss, but only a modest one — 3.74 percent. Some other, broader measures of the market recorded small gains for the year.

This time around, the Super Bowl matchup carries with it some special twists. The Bears, with their rough-edged, antiestablishment image, look like strange allies for any staid investment banker.

The way Jim McMahon, the Chicago quarterback, portrays himself, he would sooner wear a headband twitting the captains of finance than do anything that would give the securities markets a boost.

But all that is perhaps illusion. With their videos, their commercial endorsements and a contract dispute or two, many of the Chicago players have amply demonstrated their affinity for the modern world of business.

What's more, the Bears are favored by 10 points. And Wall Streeters, from long experience, like nothing better than to have the numbers on their side.

Patriots aim to cause turnovers

By HOWARD ULMAN
AP Sports Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The players didn't know what to make of their coach's bizarre behavior.

Raymond Berry gathered them around him at the New England Patriots' minicamp last May, dropped a football on the ground and flopped his lanky 6-foot-2 frame on top of it.

"We were in shock," wide receiver Cedric Jones said. "We had no idea what he was doing."

The Patriots know now. Berry was demonstrating the importance of recovering fumbles and collecting turnovers.

Berry got up off the turf, Jones said, and told his players, "This is your basic fundamental that can separate the good teams from the bad teams."

As the season progressed, the point was proven.

New England was third in the NFL with 47 takeaways. In their three playoff games, the Patriots have capitalized on 16 turnovers to score 61 of their 84 points. They have scored three touchdowns in their last five games after recovering fumbled kickoff returns.

They are hoping for more of the same when they meet the Chicago Bears in Sunday's Super Bowl.

"The first thing we do is get the guy tackled," special teams standout Mosi Tatupu said. "Then you get your hand on the ball."

The Patriots practice falling on loose balls and picking them up and running. They also learn the proper way to recover fumbles, by sliding into them rather than pouncing and having the ball squirt away.

"When we first started this drill, most of the players weren't crazy about it," said Greg Hawthorne, who forced a fumble on the second-half kickoff of New England's AFC championship game victory over Miami on Jan. 12. "Now when we do that, everybody looks forward to it."

The Patriots also practice stripping the ball from opposing players. "The last time many players did all that was in high school," said linebacker Steve Nelson. "That's the last time I did it."

All the practicing may be needed Sunday against one of the NFL's most careful teams.

The Bears have lost just one turnover, a fumble, in two playoff games. They tied for fourth in fewest regular-season turnovers with 31. The only touchdown an opponent scored on a turnover came Oct. 13, a 43-yard interception return for a touchdown by San Francisco's Carlton Williamson.

Chicago even may turn the tables on New England. The Bears led the NFL with 54 takeaways.

Still, Jones said, "We will probably overemphasize the fact that we can knock the ball out from the first play" on Sunday.

Bears QB nearly has altercation

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Jim McMahon, the Chicago Bears' iconoclastic quarterback, had an almost inevitable altercation with a photographer Monday night at a Bourbon Street restaurant.

McMahon, who has been followed around this week by a pack of paparazzi, chased one away from a table where he sat with some friends.

"I didn't want my picture taken," he said Wednesday. "I was just having a drink with my buddies and I didn't want to be bothered."

Then, looking out through his dark glasses at a room filled with reporters and photographers, he added:

"I don't like to do this but I have to do it. When I'm on my own time, I don't want cameras shoved in my face."

Featured in two festivals

Black-audience films featured

DALLAS (AP) — A collection of rare black-audience films from the 1930s and 1940s, including one production by a star of the "Amos 'n Andy" television series, forms the centerpiece of two festivals at Southern Methodist University.

About 100 vintage films, many on a perishable nitrate base, were discovered in 1983 in a Tyler warehouse as they were about to be discarded. Southwest Film-Video Archives, which acquired the films, has been slowly restoring them in a process that can take as long as a year.

"The 'Blood of Jesus' has never been shown before," said Dr. G. William Jones, archives director and SMU professor of cinema. "It is one of the biggest finds of the warehouse collection. The few books that have even mentioned this period of film history hold it in high regard."

The film, found on badly decomposed nitrate, "has the representation of being the best representation of primitive black religiosity from the era," said Jones.

Spencer Williams, who played Andy on the television version of "Amos 'n Andy," was writer-director and leading actor for the 1941 film, a safety print of which Jones later found.

The film will be shown Saturday during a three-day archives festival, "Off the Beaten Path," at SMU's Bob Hope Theatre, Owen Arts Center, and again Feb. 12-13 during a Black History Month festival.

"He was a very talented writer and director," said Jones, who said that several other Williams works are among the warehouse collection of 22 black-audience films in the archives at the SMU Meadows School of the Arts.

"We had a significant find in these black-cast films made for a black audience," he said. "The ones we found were black-cast and had black filmmakers. I feel much more of a black self-consciousness from those decades. They did not have to be affected by other points of view."

Other films from the warehouse collection include various ethnic and exploitation programmers from the 1930s, 1940s and early 1950s, both domestic and imported.

"There are old sexual exploitation films and World War II films, including 'Beasts of the East' from the Philippines, and this screening represents a wide gamut of the films that were being seen in the '30s and '40s," said Jones. "Our archive is interested in preserving the films of the independent filmmakers."

Jones said 1,500 people are expected to view the black-audience films in February.

Many more films found at the Roosth and Genecov warehouse in Tyler still must be restored, Jones said.

"The manager of this warehouse was getting ready to clean out the facilities. He had this big stack of cans and they were getting ready to throw them out; he was not even sure they were films," he said. "The manager called and said we might like to look them over."

The Zale Corp. provided more than $100,000 to restore the first seven features and first seven shorts from the warehouse.

"It took us about a year to find the money to do it and go through the technical process," said Jones. "About this time last year, we had them ready for Black History Month."

Jones said Phoenix Films and Video Inc. in New York was named the distributor of the black film collection in January. He said funds were needed to restore the remaining films on nitrate, which are stored in fire- and moisture-proof facilities north of the SMU campus.

"I get excited about restoring the remaining films when we get the money, but they are decomposing as we speak," he said.

Children of alcoholics have problems

She was the consummate over-achiever. At 31 years old, Linda had been a talk show host, owned her own business, traveled extensively and earned her master's degree.

She seemed to have everything going for her, but to her it wasn't enough.

She needed constant reinforcement from others of her self-worth. Her relationships lacked intimacy and she had difficulty being alone.

After seeking therapy Linda finally realized that the root of her problem was a fragmented upbringing by her alcoholic mother.

Linda is among a growing number of people discovering through self-help groups and organizations like the National Association of Children of Alcoholics that they didn't leave a parent's alcoholism behind by moving away from home.

Instead, as adults they often feel isolated and inadequate and have difficulty trusting others, explains Kay Kropff, Program Manager, at Palo Duro Hospital CareUnit, Canyon, Texas. Ironically, they often become alcoholics themselves.

"Because of the alcoholic parent, they skipped a lot of normal childhood things like having friends sleep over, giving parties and having kids gather at their house after school," Kropff explains. "As children, their isolation worsened along with the parent's drinking."

"Since they didn't develop the social skills that others did, as adults they still experience a lot of isolation even when they're with other people," she says.

A former professional athlete who was married and had three children complained of never feeling like he was a part of anything. His feelings of isolation led to the deterioration of his marriage when he couldn't meet his wife's emotional needs. His mother was an alcoholic.

Kropff says that feelings of inadequacy among adult children of alcoholics stem from the belief that if they'd been better children, their parents wouldn't have drunk. As adults, they constantly seek approval from spouses, friends and employers without developing their own sense of self-esteem.

Because they grew up with their parents' empty promises about how the drinking would stop, they've learned that they can't rely on anyone, Kropff adds.

"They feel that if they want a job done, they have to do it themselves," she says. "They'll be very controlling."

They're managers who can't delegate, spouses who dominate their households and parents who dictate their children's lives.

Kropff describes the son of an alcoholic who inflicted his overachieving tendencies on his two children.

"All his interactions with his 14 year and 16 year old were very intellectual," she explains adding that his daughter needed treatment for emotional problems that resulted from his unreasonable expectations.

Kropff adds that adult children of alcoholics commonly marry an alcoholic or another compulsive personality such as a workaholic or become alcoholics themselves. The National Association of Children of Alcoholics reports that 60 percent of alcoholics grew up in an alcoholic home.

She says that children of alcoholics first need to recognize that they didn't cause their parents' alcoholism.

"The goal for the children of alcoholics is not to revamp their personalities. But they do need to take negative characteristics and develop them in positive ways," Kropff explains.

The over-achiever can channel his efforts into being a good worker, she suggests.

He can turn his need to control others into a desire to help others through an appropriate career or volunteer work.

"They also need to learn to trust in other people and that it isn't normal to expect others to cause disappointment and disillusionment," she says.

Kropff urges problem drinkers to seek help before alcohol abuse leaves lasting, negative effects on their children.

The Palo Duro Hospital CareUnit staffs a 24-hour CareLine at (806)655-7723 to discuss any substance abuse problem.

POLLY'S POINTERS

Grocery bags are 'trashy'

By Polly Fisher

DEAR POLLY — White plastic grocery bags now being used by many supermarkets make great trash can liners for small trash cans. I use one in the baby's room. It keeps the trash can odor-free. When full, I just tie the handles together and tote it out.

I keep all flip-top lids from shampoo and lotion bottles to use on shampoo bottles that don't have the flip-top. The lids can be washed in the dishwasher and used over and over.

A can of cheap hair spray is a good thing to have on hand. You can use it to remove ink and permanent marker stains from clothing before laundering and even use hair spray on wasps and yellow jackets. It sticks their wings together and they fall to the floor. Then you can kill them without the risk of being stung. — CARMEN

DEAR POLLY — I have used lots of cleaners on my glass fiber bathtub. Nothing works very well, so I tried dishwasher detergent. I wet the tub, sprinkled in the detergent, then waited a few minutes. Then I scoured the tub. Worked great! — MRS. E.H.

DEAR MRS. E.H. AND READERS — Automatic dishwasher detergent is a very strong cleaner and could be harmful to the finish of some tubs. Use with caution, please. — POLLY

DEAR POLLY — If your sewing machine has a plastic bobbin, check it frequently and carefully after each use. If the plastic bobbin has any small nicks or rough edges, it could contribute to what seems to be lower tension problems like loops, knotted thread, skipped stitches and frequent thread breakage. I had my machine in two different repair shops where they found no reason for my sewing problems, leading me to buy a new sewing machine. Then I found out quite by accident about the "plastic bobbin syndrome." After replacing the plastic bobbin with a new metal one, my machine sews just great. — MAE

DEAR MAE — This tip could save someone else from a costly and unnecessary repair bill. Sewers: Check your plastic bobbins! Your helpful Pointer earns you the Pointer of the Week award, a copy of my book "Polly's Pointers: 1081 Helpful Hints for Making Everything Last Longer." Others who would like this book can order it for $6.50. Make check payable to POLLY'S POINTERS and send to POLLY'S POINTERS, Box 1216, Dept. 55, Cincinnati, OH 45201. — POLLY

DR. GOTT Be prudent in taking zinc

By Peter H. Gott, M.D.

DEAR DR. GOTT — I just read in your column about the person trying in vain to clear up bad body odor. I've used zinc supplements in the diets of my own children and several of my son's friends. It's worked for their body odor.

DEAR READER — Zinc has not been scientifically proven to affect body odor. However, I am not aware that a modest zinc supplement would be harmful. I don't recommend an amount exceeding 100 mg. a day, because gastrointestinal disturbances and anemia can result from overdose.

DEAR DR. GOTT — In 1958, while in the Navy, I came down with tuberculosis. Since then I've had lung trouble, including emphysema. What other trouble can I expect from my past tuberculosis?

DEAR READER — Tuberculosis remains a serious illness, even though modern treatment is usually effective. Sometimes tuberculosis bacteria can stay dormant in the body for years, then later reactivate to cause devastating infections in lungs and other tissues. Emphysema is not ordinarily a consequence of tuberculosis.

You should have periodic checkups to make sure that your TB remains cured. Your doctor is the best judge of the frequency and extent of the examinations.

DEAR DR. GOTT — I have a 2½-year-old boy who has, for several months, been waking up screaming at night. The doctor says he has "night terrors" and put him on Tofranil (10 mg.). It has helped, but is it safe for him? Is there anything else I can do?

DEAR READER — Tofranil is an antidepressant that has been shown to be useful as temporary therapy for children who are bedwetters. The medicine is potent, in fact, it is quite dangerous at high doses. The manufacturer discourages the use of Tofranil in children younger than 6 for conditions other than bedwetting. Seek an opinion from another doctor.

DEAR DR. GOTT — I've got diplopia. Is there effective treatment for relief or a cure?

DEAR READER — Diplopia (double vision) commonly results from imbalance of the ocular muscles that control eye movement. Treatment depends on the cause. Because diplopia can be a symptom of serious neurological and/or muscular diseases, you will need to have a thorough general examination, including tests for nerve and muscle function.

Ways with Wine
 by David Hutchins

THE NAPA VALLEY
 The Napa Valley, ninety miles Northeast of San Francisco, boasts many wineries that date back to the beginning of California winemaking. The valley has always had the natural conditions for making fine wines in the European tradition. The contour of the land and the maximum area that could be cultivated led to relatively small vineyard sizes. The entire Napa Valley has but 22 thousand acres of wine grapes under cultivation. It is approximately 10 percent of California's total and is divided among many vineyard owners. For 15 miles or so along Highway 29 are some of the best-known names in California winemaking. The Napa Valley is particularly suited to growing noble varieties such as Cabernet Sauvignon, Pinot Noir, Chardonnay, Johannisberg Riesling, and Zinfandel, all in a variety of styles.

At THE STORE we love to talk about wines so come on by and let us answer any questions you may have about them. We are very proud of our extensive inventory of fine wines...domestic and imported. Whether your personal tastes lean toward wines from Napa Valley or toward French wines chances are we carry what you are looking for. Stop by 400 N. 25 Mile, 364-7802 and look us over. We are open Mon.-Sat. 10-9, use our drive up door until midnight for beer and wine, on Sun. only beer and wine is available from 12-12.

The climate and soil of California can approximate almost every wine producing region in the world.

Paramedic's life not always rosey

HOUSTON (AP) — On television, the victims are always eager for help and grateful to their rescuers. And the heroes are happy and fulfilled by the rewarding nature of their work. But, according to Houston Fire Department paramedic John Fryer, that's just on television.

"I've been cussed at, spit at and shot at," says Fryer, 27. "A lot of times they (the victims) just don't want you there; they might be drunk and get beat up or shot in a bar fight and all they can think about is getting even."

Fryer says that often older people who have been frequently hospitalized don't want to make a return trip with paramedics. When the patient asks them to leave they usually do, Fryer says. In cases where there could be serious consequences, the patient is asked to sign a release. But, after a call to a supervisor, those who are in imminent danger are usually transported anyway.

"It usually ends up that they aren't really even mad. They just want someone to make them go," Fryer says. On a recent call to the home of an elderly woman who had varicose veins in her legs and large open sores, he found one of the veins had ruptured and she had just lost a great deal of blood.

"We spent 30 minutes trying to get her to go," he says, "and then we decided it was in her best interest and just took her. I think she was glad, though."

But the lost time it takes to cajole a patient is an added frustration in a job where there are frustrations enough.

Fryer says he often hears another ambulance being called in when he is occupied with something relatively minor. "We make calls where the people don't need an ambulance and they know they don't," says Fryer. He says he and his partner rushed to a man's home at 3 a.m., not knowing what to expect. It turned out that he had cut his hand on a garbage can and didn't have anything with which to bandage it. Since the stores were closed he called an ambulance. Fryer says he just gritted his teeth and gave the man a Band Aid.

There is a $75 charge for ambulance service, but when no one is transported to a hospital there is no charge — and that means some people make unnecessary calls without penalty. People often call for medical advice, like a woman who called an ambulance because she wanted paramedics to inspect a two-inch cut on her son's foot.

"She just wanted to know if she should take him to the doctor for stitches," he says. The public doesn't understand that those minutes spent unnecessarily could mean the difference between someone else's life and death. Every minute counts to the victims of cardiac arrest, or stoppage of the heart; if basic life support (like cardiopulmonary resuscitation) isn't started within four to six minutes there will be irreversible brain damage. In August, there were 53 cardiac arrests out of about 5,000 responses made by ambulances. About 45 of the victims died. The recovery rate is 46 percent when CPR has been started within one minute.

Fryer says he picked up one man who had only superficial stab wounds to the chest, but he became so anxious about his condition that he went into full cardiac arrest on the way to the hospital. "He literally almost worried himself to death," he says.

Some of the most difficult calls are wrecks, says Fryer. Many times the driver has been impaled by the steering wheel or stick shift of a car and paramedics must "carefully cut the object from the car, leaving it intact in the victim. "You can't just pull it out" because that's probably all that's keeping the person from bleeding to death, he says.

Fryer says on more than one occasion he has had to climb inside a wrecked vehicle to work on someone pinned inside while another crew worked to free the injured person. "You try to get inside the car as close as possible and you have to bandage or splint a broken limb as you go," he says. "I've been on my knees working on someone and felt the glass cutting through my pants. But motorcycle wrecks tend to be the worst. Fryer says he once went to the scene of a motorcycle wreck in which the bike chain was wrapped around the driver's leg. "I had to hold onto his leg to keep it from coming off" when they freed it from the chain, he says.

Fryer, who has been a paramedic for 14 months, works out of Fire Station 8. His ambulance is one of the busiest in the city, making between 330 and 350 calls a month. Coming on duty at 6:30 a.m. and not leaving until 6:30 a.m. the next morning, Fryer is often busy every minute of his 24-hour shift. He says on a recent Saturday he made 22 calls in a 24-hour period.

And the events during that 24 hours that may have included pulling mangled bodies from the wreckage of automobiles or working futilely on a 12-year-old who has been shot by his father aren't quickly forgotten when the shift ends.

Fryer, who has been married for seven years and has two sons, says he often comes home tense and irritable. "I don't always come home in the best of moods," he says, "especially after several abusive patients."

"I make so many calls, don't get to eat a good meal and sometimes have to go all night with no sleep. That makes it hard to go home and deal with family problems."

And statistics bear that out. At a recent seminar on stress presented at the convention of International Fire Fighters Association, Dr. Jeff Mitchell told members that paramedics and firefighters have one of the highest divorce rates in the country. He said that 86 percent of emergency personnel experience severe emotional reactions to stress on the job and most paramedics are burned out within seven years.

Mary Fryer says it is hard for her to see her husband come home after a hard day and not be able to let his frustrations out. "It's not like he brings his work home," she says. "He comes in and won't talk about it because he doesn't want to upset me, so he holds it in."

Mrs. Fryer says it's sometimes hard to be understanding and there is no organized effort to help wives cope with the strain of being married to a man in such a stressful job.

And the wives have plenty to cope with. Fryer, who was a firefighter for 5½ years before becoming a paramedic, was severely injured on the job just two days after Christmas 1980. He was fighting a fire at a northwest Houston apartment complex when a stairway collapsed beneath him, pinning him beneath a mound of burning rubble. Clothes aflame, Fryer was in shock as he stumbled from the burning building complex where he had been trapped for what seemed like hours.

He sustained second and third degree burns over 17 percent of his body. During the month-long treatment at Hermann Hospital, he underwent three skin-graft operations. He then spent five months recuperating at home.

Houston Fire Chief Robert Clayton confirms there is a large turnover among Houston paramedics, with Emergency Medical Service personnel generally returning to firefighting ranks after three to four years.

"I'm proud of my dad because he saves people," says Fryer's 6-year-old son, Jason. And for Fryer that makes it all — or almost all — worthwhile.

The Newspaper BIBLE

WHAT PRICE PRIDE?
While Herod was in Caesarea, a delegation from Tyre and Sidon arrived to see him. He was highly displeased with the people of those two cities, but the delegates made friends with Blastus, the royal secretary, and asked for peace, for their cities were economically dependent upon trade with Herod's country.

An appointment was granted, and when the day arrived he put on his royal robes, sat on his throne and made a speech to them. At its conclusion the people gave him a great ovation, shouting, "It is the voice of a god and not of a man!"

Instantly, an angel of the Lord struck Herod with a sickness so that he was filled with maggots and died—because he accepted the people's worship instead of giving glory to God.

God's Good News was spreading rapidly and there were many new believers. Barnabas and Saul now visited Jerusalem and, as soon as they had finished their business, returned to Antioch, taking John Mark with them.

Among the prophets and teachers of the church at Antioch were Barnabas and Symeon (also called "The Black Man"), Lucius (from Cyrene), Mananah (the foster-brother of King Herod), and Saul. Acts 12:20-25, 13:1

Home helps schizophrenics cope with life outside institution

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — "I felt I was lost and there was no hope for me."

Joe Carter is a 29-year-old schizophrenic living at Oasis House. His life, filled with hallucinations, bizarre behavior, and hospital stays for nine years, has evened out with drug therapy.

Carter (whose name has been changed to protect his privacy) still has a long way to go.

"I'm establishing myself again. It's going to take time. I'm not going to rush. I can't function if I rush."

Carter is depending on Oasis House to help — for as long as it takes.

Oasis House helps people like Carter cope with life outside a mental institution. There is a day program and the apartment project. According to director Carol Jeffers, no member has returned to a mental institution directly from Oasis House since its reorganization in 1982.

Carter was released from the state mental hospital in Big Spring in September. Carter works part-time at a store in the evenings.

Carter is among 15 former mental patients who live in apartments on Magdalen Street. Their expenses are paid by the Big Spring hospital until they are able to move into the community.

Director Carol Jeffers said the apartment program is not a halfway house, it is a program of mutual support among the staff and Oasis House members.

Since the apartments opened in April 1984, about 20 people have successfully moved into their own homes, Ms. Jeffers said.

Oasis House also is a mutual support group for people who have mental health problems and live in the community.

Most are schizophrenic, according to Ms. Jeffers. "It's like a club," she said. About 60 members connect with the center on a daily basis. They learn vocations, such as clerical, kitchen or maintenance work. They join group therapy and socialize. The staff helps members find part-time jobs, manage money, or help with problems which arise in members' lives, according to Ms. Jeffers.

Transitional employment, another phase, occurs with less staff supervision. The center's members have contracted to clean the city recreation centers and to stock goods at Goodfellow Air Force Base commissary in the evenings.

The final phase involves outside part-time jobs for members. The center helps members find jobs, get interviews or any help they may need.

"Some Oasis House members may never move into the community. They may prefer to restrict themselves to the center, which is fine with Ms. Jeffers. "Even if we don't agree with that decision, we keep quiet. We will support them. Our goal is to keep people from returning to the hospital."

About 10 similar programs exist in Texas, Jeffers said.

Mental health organizations from Odessa, Abilene and Corpus Christi have visited Oasis House to get ideas for their own program, she said.

The program, with activities and goals that are geared to the members' needs, was the result of Ms. Jeffers' efforts when she became director of Oasis House. Originally, "It was group therapy and arts and crafts," Ms. Jeffers said.

Ms. Jeffers wanted something more.

"I started looking for options." A visit to Independence House in Dallas (which had patterned itself after Fountain House in New York) gave Ms. Jeffers a direction.

"It was a big step for everyone. But the numbers tripled." The membership grew from about 14 in 1982 to 60 members today.

"We deal in reality here. People have to learn to live with their hallucinations. They have to cope with symptoms the rest of their lives.

"The program gets people out of the house. Staying home is not healthy for anyone. They get around people who care," Ms. Jeffers said.

"I've seen people come a long way. They have the skills and a confidence built up to cope. "There is a good enough life outside."
