of a German Deserter 1.55 1.43 OI & GETHIAN DESCRICES 1.55 1.43 CONTINUED FROM LAST WEEK 1.83 1.55

Here it was reported that Belgians mutilated German soldiers. Whether this were true, or only a rumor, similar to others being constantly started by German soldiers, I cannot say, but I do know that on August 24, after the French had retired, it was made known through an army order that German soldiers had been murdered there, and that the German army could not leave the scene of these outrages without first avenging the victims.

It was ordered by the commander of the army to level the remainder of the city and to show no mercy. As we took a short rest from our pursuit of the enemy and looked backward clouds of smoke to the eastward showed that the order had been executed. A remaining battery of artillery had reduced the city to ashes.

The French had made a stand outside the city and resisted to the utmost, but they were outnumbered. It was simply impossible to resist the pressure of the German war machine. When the German columns, with fixed bayonets, attacked to the accompaniment of their blood-curdling yells which, like their steel, penetrated to the bone, they resembled in every respect American Indians going into action, flinging themselves with bloodcurdling yells upon their enemies. After a three-hour fight many Frenchmen gave themselves up as prisoners. With uplifted hands they sought mercyal countries

At last, on the night of August 28 and 24, the enemy's ranks were thrown into confusion and they retired slowly I was in the first detachment which oursued them. To the right and left of the road, in the field and ditches, were dead and wounded.

The red pantaloons of the French howed brightly on the ground. The field gray of the Germans could hardly e discerned.

The distance between us and the retreating French became greater. Our soldiers became happier over the outcome of the battle and seemed to forret their past hardships. The corpses which filled the roads and ditches were forgotten amid the lokes and songs on every side. The men were already accustomed to the borrors of war to such an extent that they imconcernedwalked over the corpses, not even slight detour.

At noon we nalted and were served with dinner from the field kitchens. We were surely hungry enough and

Our thirst became niore unbearable and we grew weaker from minute to minute. Many in our ranks fell, unable to re further. Nothing remained for our commander ex-

Among them there was a farm wagon upon which were several civillan prisoners, apparently franc-tireurs. A Catholic priest was among them. He like the others, had his hands ned behind him with a rope. To our curious were told that he had incited the farmers to poison the water in the

Soon we reached the village and at the first well at which we might have satisfied our thirst we found a sentinel posted. He drove us away with a warning that the water was poisoned.

Disappointed and terribly embittered, the soldiers cursed and gnashed their teeth. They hurried on to the next well, but everywhere sentinels forbade our taking refreshment.

In an open space in the center of the village was a big well from which there came water clear as crystal that emptied into a big trough. Five soldiers stood guard here to see that no one drank. I was just about to proceed with my comrades when a large part of my company threw themselves like men possessed onto the well. The guards were completely overcome and, greedy as animals, all the men drank. They quenched their thirst, but not one became Ill. The priest, as we learned later, was punished because, the officers said, the water in ever village had been poisoned, and we were told that only by a happy chance had the lives of our soldiers been spared. The God of the Germans had kept true guard, it appeared, but the God of the Belgians was not there to poisoned. These lies were told to arouse hatred of the Belgians among our soldiers.

In the evening, at dusk, we reached a village east of the Bertrix. There we found poisoned water also. In the middle of the village we halted and I could see through a front window of a house before which I stood. In a miserable home of a laborer we saw a her. Suddenly a stone as large as a fist was thrown through the window ipto the room and a little girl was wounded on the right hand.

In this village we were billeted in a barn. With some comrades, I went to the village to buy food. We obtained ham, bread and wine at a farmhouse, but the people refused any payment because they considered us ruests.
