COUNTY TO GET NEW COLLEGE CENTER

To Establish College Training Center In County

A Freshman College Center, a local unit established jointly under the administration of the National Youth Administration and the Emergency Education Division of the Works Progress Administration, for the purpose of offering education, both academic and vocational; job training, guidance, recreational and work opportunities to Hall County young men and women has been authorized for Hall County.

The Freshman College Center, the purpose of which is to offer academic work of the freshman year rank to young men and women who are unable to attend a regular college, will be set up in either Memphis or Lakeview, County School Superintendent Vera Gilvath stated this morning. A definite decision as to the location of the college center will be determined by the number of students from each community wishing to enroll.

J. H. Treadwell of Memphis, a graduate of Mississippi College, has been named instructor for the college work, and efforts are being made to secure another instructor. If another teacher is secured, four or five courses will be taught. But if Mr. Treadwell is unassisted in the work, it is likely that only two or three classes will be taught.

LOCAL FARMERS TO RECEIVE RESERVE

Additional Allotment Made to Farmers of County

Hall County farmers will receive tax exemption certificates in connection with the Bankhead Cotton Act for a total 3,190 bales of cotton. This is an additional allotment to individual Bankhead applicants, and it is made on the basis of short crops in recent years, other than 1930, caused by storm, hail, flood, drought or other natural causes.

These certificates will be divided among 2,124 Hall County cotton producers who complied with this year's Bankhead cotton program.

The exemption certificates have been received by County Agent James A. Jackson, and they will be ready for distribution Saturday morning. The county agent and his office crew will be attending to farming problems in the Turkey vicinity tomorrow.

The certificates received represent the ten percent that is deducted from each farmer's allowable and put into a reserve pool for the entire state. The reserve is apportioned to individual cotton producers on the basis of short crops in the past, with the exception of the year 1930, which year was marked off of Hall County's record in the matter of crop production.

START DRILLING AT KNORPP TEST

Work to Be Resumed at Weatherly Well Tomorrow

Drilling operation are to be resumed at the Knorpp test, on the southeast quarter of Section 7, Block 2, A. E. & M. Survey, just south of Red River, near Weatherly, tomorrow, according to information received this morning.

Johnson & Kemnitz, Oklahoma City drilling contractors, who are now in charge of operations at the test, have had a crew of men busy for the past several days, getting the rig in readiness for work, and will begin making hole again in the morning.

This test, which was spudded in about 60 days ago, has been dormant for the past month. It was spudded in by W. T. Davis and associates, who put the hole down about 75 feet and then stopped operations.

The property, which comprises the rig and a block of about 1200 acres, was transferred from Davis to Virgil Payne, of Turkey, representing those interested in the test, and the new contract made with Johnson & Kemnitz. The contract calls for a depth of not less than 6000 feet.

Word is also received that drilling operations on the Phillips test, south of the river, are going forward steadily.

Right in the Well-Known Breadbox

BEHIND THE SCENE IN WASHINGTON

By RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Staff Correspondent
WASHINGTON, Oct. 31

There were trustworthy figures to the cost of making a loaf of bread, the merits of the battle between Secretary Wallace and the baking companies over increasing bread prices might be more decided.

It's all very technical and complicated. But bread prices likely to be a political issue certainly they're causing plenty of excitement here at the moment or perhaps you'd better know the facts.

The national average price of a pound of bread was 6.4 cents in early 1933. It had increased to 8.3 cents by July, 1934, and maintained at about that figure the current boosts of one cent a loaf. The original increase was considered more than enough to cover the half cent in profit taxes, the higher costs of ingredients, and still leave a quarter of a cent for added costs and larger profits.

Thus Wallace tries to off the claim that the late increase is due to that favorite of food-makers, the processing tax. But he has to admit that the cost of ingredients—flour, sugar, shortening and dried milk advanced in the last year. He says that no more than a fourth of half a cent increase is justified and that a general cent increase means $60,000,000 or more of added profit for bakers.

What Wallace doesn't know just how much less than a cent of increase is justified by higher costs. His figures, that the cost of flour in a year of bread is 35-100ths of a higher and shortening 13-1 of a cent up, are computed on an old base with the assumption bakers still use the same proportion of high-grade hard flour as in other years and same amount and quality of shortening.

Over in Baltimore the most expensive kind of bread flour $1.20 a barrel between January and October. But the cheapest type of bread flour went up 10 cents a barrel. (A barrel is 300 pounds of bread.) The Wallace estimates were based on the cost of the most expensive flour.

The AAA can't tell the cost of this use recently—and the effect on costs—because it has access to the books of baking companies. If the average cost of a loaf of bread has increased only a quarter or a third of a cent it's a secret to officials here.

All AAA can do is ask the bakers to submit their cost figures and challenge them to explain to the consuming public. Which isn't always a safe procedure, as evidenced recently when the Department of Agriculture found that certain large packing companies recently had reported about 10 times as large a profit to the bakers and stockyard.

Bakers, for instance, cut their costs for shortening gone up 300 per cent, while AAA can't see how it could possibly have been more than 70 cent. It's hard for the innocent bystander to solve this discrepancy.

AAA has plenty for which to answer, but it also has the uncomfortable assurance that it has to answer for plenty of which it isn't to blame. The cent blast of the National Retailers Association — promises to discourage consumption of foods, blaming the government entirely for high meat prices, completely ignoring the fact that — was a case in point.

THE PRAYER OF THE WAR LORD

WITH war apparently about to flame out again between Japan and China, with Italy and Ethiopia already in battle, and with other nations looking askance at each other, one brings to mind one of the most seathing denunciations of war ever penned.

Mark Twain, one of America's most delightful humorists, was the author of "The War Lord's Prayer," but the prayer is anything but humor. We give it in full below:

"Oh Lord, our God, help us to tear their soldiers to bloody shreds with our shells; help us to cover their smiling fields with the pale forms of their patriot dead; help us to drown the thunder of the guns with the cries of the wounded, writhing in pain; help us to lay waste their humble homes with a hurricane of fire; help us to wring the hearts of their unoffending widows with unavailing grief; help us to turn them out roofless with their little children, to wander unfriended through wastes of their desolated land, in rags and thirst, the sport of the sun's flame in summer and the icy winds of winter, broken in spirit, worn with travail, imploring Thee for the refuge of the grave and denied it—for our sakes, who adore Thee, Lord, blast their hopes, blight their lives, protract their bitter pilgrimage, make heavy their steps, water their way with their tears, stain the white snow with the blood of their wounded feet!"

Can you read these lines and see anything glorious in war? Can you visualize the picture he presents and shout huzzahs as the flower of any nation marches to battle?

The GOLDEN FEATHER

Robert Bruce © 1935 NEA Service, Inc.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

JEAN DUNN, secretary to WALTER MONTAGUE, lawyer, answers her answer when Bobby asks her to marry him.

The Golden Feather next week meets SANDY HARKINS, whose business connections are introduced by Bobby.

JEAN to MR. and MRS. LEWIS, and Bobby arranges to sell the bonds for Lewis. He sells them to Jean's employer.

LARRY GLENN, federal agent, is a friend of Jean's parents, and is going to locate Wingy Lewis, a robber. Larry locates some of the bonds and questions SON.

BOYD, gambler, about them. He confesses he bought the bonds from Donald Montague.

Montague tells Larry he bought them from Bobby.

Larry talks to Bobby, learns he bought a car recently, and that it is armored. Federal agents go to Lewis' hotel, but his wife has disappeared.

Larry helps Sandy convince Jean she had nothing to do with the holdup. She goes to her town for a vacation. Suddenly she realizes that Sandy is not with her at the time she lied to the police.

Sandy comes to her and she asks him about the holdup.

He offers an explanation which seems satisfactory. Then he asks her to marry him.

GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XXIV

When Sandy asked her to marry Jean looked at him for a long time without replying. Then she said slowly, "Sandy—I'm an idiot."

"How do you mean?"

"Well—" she faltered, then she said, "I—I just couldn't believe a man's wife when a thing like this—this Oklahoma mixup—was still hanging over his head. I don't know, Sandy. Don't you see?"

"Marriage would be too—too uncertain, that way."

She looked at him anxiously. He said agreement.

"Sure, I see," he said. "I don't blame you for feeling that way. Listen; suppose that gets all right, like Mr. Montague's. Will you, then?"

There was another long pause. She tried to stand off and get away from her feeling for Sandy.

But this new background of life rather than the old life of Dover; she tried to remember that it was Bobby she was in love with, and not Sandy; but none of it was of any use. She was only conscious of his compelling masculine presence beside her, of his arm across her shoulders, of his face close to hers, with that old-time, half-smiling curve to the lips and that carefree glint to the eyes.

"Yes," she whispered at last. It was out before she knew that she was going to say it; and as she heard herself say it she felt a sudden pang in her breast, as if she had said something that she had meant not to say, and wished that she could recall it. But then Sandy's lips were on hers, and she was pressed against him with that lean muscular arm tight about her. . . . and there was no room for any doubts or regrets.

When he released her, at last, she suddenly remembered that they were sitting in a public place in broad daylight; and she detached herself from his embrace as nervously as a frightened high school girl.

"Sandy!" she cried, looking about her anxiously. "The whole town is apt to see us!"

"What of it?" asked Sandy, grinning broadly. There was a good foot of daylight between them now, and he made no attempt to close the gap. Instead he got out a cigaret and lighted it.

"What of it? You've lived in a small town and you ask that? Don't you know that everybody in the place would be jabbering about it by evening? I wouldn't have a shred of reputation left."

"Well," said Sandy lazily. "where's the harm in kissing your future husband, anyhow?"

"Yes, but—but they don't know about that part of it."

"Why not tell 'em?"

She paused. "Why not, indeed? What was there to stop her from leading Sandy down to the bank this very minute and introducing him to her father as her future husband? What was keeping her from taking him straight home and presenting him to her mother?"

Why was she instinctively assuming that no one was to know? There seemed to be no logical answer to any of those questions; yet she found herself saying:

"Oh, Sandy—let's just keep it secret for a while, yet. It's so—so new! You don't mind, do you?"

He grinned and looked at the river through half-closed eyelids.

"Not me," he said. "Keep it dark as long as you please—so long as you don't forget about it yourself."

"I won't," she said gaily.

"Okay. The rest of it's all right, then. Only—" he flipped his cigaret away and unexpectedly laid one hand on her knee. He squeezed it so hard that she winced, and then withdrew and showed his hands in his pockets, his long legs extended far in front of him. "Only it's terribly hard for me to keep my hands off of you. You've got me going, baby."

This was spoken like the old Sandy—slangy, breezy and outspoken. She laughed, and refused to admit that the remark had somewhat jarred.

"Well," she said, "you've got to keep them off around here."

"Whatever you say," he said idly, "is all right with me."

The pause that followed seemed to Jean, depressingly, to be a trifle awkward. She did not know why—except that she had just promised to marry a man, and it did seem that sitting here two feet apart, talking in this fashion, wasn't quite—well, wasn't quite in tune with what she would expect such an occasion to be like. She absently fingered a fold of her dress.

"How long are you going to be here?" she asked.

"Not so long," said Sandy. "I've got a call to make about 50 miles west of here. But Lord! I couldn't go through here without stopping in to see you, could I?"

"But you're going to be here long enough to meet my people, aren't you?"

"Oh, sure, if you say so."

"Sandy!"

"What's the matter?" He sat up and looked at her in puzzled concern.

"Well—" she looked at him with hurt eyes. "Couldn't he see that he had pained her by that remark? Wouldn't it be the most natural thing for him to want to go to her father and mother at once?"

He seemed to sense what was going through her mind.

"I didn't mean that quite like it sounded," he said, sliding closer to her. "Only you said you wanted to keep things secret for a while, so I thought—"

"Oh," She came to his defense and told herself not to be childish. "Of course, Sandy. It's all right. Only I would like to have you meet them."

"I'd be glad to."

He stood up, and extended a hand to help her to her feet.

"Why not go do it right now?" he asked.

"Fine."

She got up, and they walked along the path back to where the main street of the little town ran past the park. As they started down the street Sandy said, suddenly, "Oh by the way—I suppose they know you in the bank here, don't they? Would you tell them who I am so I could get a check cashed?"

"Know me?" She laughed. "I hope they do. My daddy's president of that bank."

Sandy looked at her blankly, then grinned. "So he is," he said. "You did tell me that once, didn't you? Listen, if you'd rather not, don't bother. I can make it to the next point okay. I only wanted to cash a small one—"

"Of course I don't mind. Why should I? Come on."

She took him to the bank. Through the half-opened door of her father's office she could see her father in busy consultation with someone, so she led Sandy directly to the cashier's wicket.

"Mr. Hobart," she said gaily. "This is Mr. Harkins and he's all right. He wants some money."

Mr. Hobart smiled his dry, banker's smile, and extended a hand through the wicket. Sandy grinned in return and gave the hand a friendly shake.

"If you vouch for him, Jean, I guess we'll have to let him have what he wants," said Mr. Hobart. "If I'd known that I'd have asked for more," drawled Sandy, laying a check on the counter. "All I want is $20."

Mr. Hobart inspected the check with that air of reserved suspicion peculiar to bankers, glanced briefly at Jean, and handed Sandy two $10 bills. Sandy took them and thanked him, and they stood there indulging in a moment or two of small talk. While they talked Sandy lounged against the counter, glancing idly about the lobby.

"What've you been doing—putting in a burglar alarm?" he asked casually, noticing the still-visible traces of the activity of the workmen whom Jean had seen that morning.

"Tear gas," said Mr. Hobart proudly. "If I should just kick this button here, you people'd go running out of here so fast—"

He chuckled. Sandy looked interested.

"Tear gas, eh?" he said. "How'd it work?"

They explained it to him, and he nodded thoughtfully. When they had finished he said, "Well, I guess you won't need to worry about this Jackson gang that's supposed to be on the prowl around this part of the country, will you?"

"Indeed we won't," said Mr. Hobart. "They'll get an eyeful if they come in here." And he chuckled again at his own wit.

Jean saw her father's caller leave, and she led Sandy to the front of the bank, took him into the office, and introduced him as a friend from Dover. They had half an hour's chat in the banker's office, and then the two young people excused themselves and walked to the Dunn home; but when they got there Jean remembered that this was the afternoon her mother attended a bridge tea. LET'S TALK ABOUT CLOTHES

DENTON, Oct. 31.—Have you ever tried to pick out a working girl by her clothes? Look around any smart restaurant, and ten to one you can't tell her from her leisured sister. The former drab clothes that screamed "office" have vanished and the modern girl goes to the office, tastefully and correctly groomed—a credit to any organization.

Business women have asked that we suggest an office wardrobe. So suppose we begin with a scarf stuffed in at the neck, or can be slipped over tailored frocks. Select a novelty gray color for this costume and you can brighten it with a royal purple velvet scarf. Tailored frocks complement in the office wardrobe. Neat as a pin, these dresses display feminine touches of white or flesh at the neck, and have elbow or three-quarter length sleeves.

Of course a suit is necessary for the working girl, and you will need two skirts this year—one to match and one to contrast. Your suit can be slim and tailored with a short jacket, and after 5 o'clock you can add a trotter length coat with a fur collar. Your strictly business costume will be well concealed.

Dark crepe dresses, quiet enough for the office, yet gay enough for dinner are nice to have. Military braid and chiffon make effective trimming for these dresses, and soft little velvet hats complete the ensemble.

The office worker needs a coat for "everything"—one that is not too tailored and not too fussy. Girls at Texas State College for Women (CIA) suggest a novelty wool coat topped by a handsome fur collar.

SISTER MARY'S KITCHEN

BY MARY E. DAGUE
NEA Service Staff Writer

Five days I am bored with life and three meals a day. I go into the kitchen and experiment with seasoning. I cannot visualize so often the opportunities for cook's amusement and pleasure that lie in your cabinet pots and jars.

Of course, you must use gumption in choosing seasoning. Don't let the flavor of your food wither in cinnamon or all spice or pepper. But while the soup that has been salted with too heavy a hand seems like a tragedy, the useless dish is even more so, asserts, candies and sweets of kinds gain in flavor if a few grains of salt are added. Any combination containing milk or cream requires salt. Even coffee is more delicious if a bit of salt is added into the fusion.

Sugar Helps Vegetables
Sugar is another everyday seasoning that works wonders when judiciously used. Unless vegetables are fresh from the garden a bit of sugar is needed to heighten their natural sweetness. Tomatoes always have a dash of sugar. Peas develop a richer flavor when a bit of sugar is rubbed into their surface. All dressings and salads containing lemon juice or vinegar need some sugar.

Both sugar and salt are helpful in blending several flavors into a smooth combination. Highly seasoned sauces and baked-stuffs are dependent on skillful seasoning with salt and sugar. As a seasoning for meat and vegetables, black pepper is more effective than white because the strength of the pepper berry is found in the outer shells of which black pepper is made. You need two pepper mills in your house, a wooden one for the kitchen and a pewter one, say, for the dining table. This insures freshly ground pepper for all seasoning purposes.

Cream of lima bean soup made faintly pink with paprika is nice served with toasted pimento cheese squares and olives.

Toasted Pimento Cheese Squares
Ten slices of bread cut 1-3 inch thick, 1 1-2 cups American cream cheese, 3 tablespoons chopped pimento, 4 tablespoons butter.

The packaged cheese works up easily and smoothly. Mash cheese, add butter and pimento and mix until blended. Place five slices of bread, one on top of the other with cheese filling between. Repeat with remaining slices of bread. Put in refrigerator until firm, about 1-2 hour. Slice each mound of bread into 4 slices. Bake in a moderately hot oven (375 degrees F.) until brown. Serve hot.

In this case the toasting develops flavor quite as much as the seasonings.

Witches Will Stalk Memphis Streets Tonight

Memphis people are reminded to take in their pot plants, porch swings and outhouses tonight in order to combat the mischief that will be on foot—for tonight is the night of October 31, and October 31 is recognized as Halloween.

For the past several days church and civic clubs have been staging parties of a Halloween nature, and tonight will see several others. The West Ward school is promoting an all-school carnival for their building, while the Home Economics Department and the Future Farmers of America of the local High school have combined for a party at the High school building tonight.

Several other private and church parties are also scheduled to be held, and black cats, spooks and hobgoblins are expected to be roaming the streets here from dusk until dawn in the morning. Little children are cautioned to beware of devilment or witches may whisk them away to the moon never to return.

Children of not so tender years are also cautioned to tread byways lightly, for if goblins don't find them, the city and county law forces may. Both departments of law and order here will be in evidence for the stated purpose of discouraging the theft of porch swings, lawn mowers and other detachable possessions.

at the country club, so there was no one at home but Elen, the cook.

"Well," said Sandy, "perhaps it's just as well. I've really got to be on my way. Should have started before this."

"Oh Sandy!" she said, disappointed. "Do you have to go today?"

"Yeah, I've got to be there tonight, and it's 50 miles. I may be back this way—when are you going back to Dover?"

"Saturday morning. By train." "Oh, Well, I don't suppose I'll be back before Saturday. I'll see you in Dover then, in a week or two."

She was conscious of a feeling of antichimax as he bade her good-by and strode off down the street to get his car. This was a momentous day: she had accepted a proposal—and here was her lover, not an hour later, airily strolling off almost as if nothing had happened. She sat on the porch railing and watched him until he was out of sight. And then, for the first time that afternoon, she thought of something:

"What on earth am I going to say to Bobby?"

YUGOSLAV PRINCE ARDENTLY ADMIRES ESTHER JOHNSON

Prince Paul, regent of Yugoslavia, is an ardent admirer of Esther Johnson, greatest woman pianist, who Tuesday night will appear in concert at the High School Auditorium.

And through his highness, Miss Johnson has a standing invitation to be entertained at the royal palace in Belgrade.

On a concert tour of Europe, the artist was a guest at a party in Belgrade, given by Dr. Dymally Price, then American minister to Yugoslavia.

Prince Paul, himself an artist and a thorough student of Bach, Princess Olga, Princess Marina, Princess Elizabeth of Greece, the British German and Austrian ministers also were guests.

Miss Johnson played the piano at the party. As a courtesy to the German minister the artist played a number by Bach, first of the great German musicians.

Prince Paul, cousin of the slain King Alexander and a great uncle of Peter II, the boy king, came to attention, enthralled by Miss Johnson's playing. He was profuse in his applause and praise.

"You come to the palace and I will play Bach for you," the prince invited.

And now whenever Miss Johnson plays a concert in Belgrade the entire front center section of concert hall seats is reserved for the royal family.

But strange as it may seem, the seats always are empty.

"Prince Paul is quite popular with his subjects and there is no danger, but the concert hall is at the university and the students are the most democratic, the most active in politics," explained Miss Johnson. "There has been, at the Ft. Worth and Denver Passenger depot and will remain here for one day only Wednesday November 6.

times, considerable political turmoil in Yugoslavia, and for that reason His Royal Highness never attends these public concerts."

Miss Johnson's concerts in Belgrade are arranged by the Obilic Society, an organization of students.

Perhaps no pianist ever has taken the hearts of the Yugoslavians as has Esther Johnson. Her coming always is heralded as a great event. She played last in Yugoslavia while the country was in deep mourning over the death of King Alexander. All concerts of a lighter character were prohibited during the three months set aside for mourning, but it happened to be the anniversary of Mozart's death and the Amarillo girl played all Mozart programs with the orchestra.

Yugoslav critics have said:

"It is not possible to play the music of Mozart better than Esther Johnson plays it. Esther Johnson's musical understanding is an extraordinary art, fine, pure without a shadow. As an enchantress, she opened up to us a realm where she, with her fine feelings, reigns supreme."

While touring Yugoslavia the artist recognized in the South Slav music the rhythmic soul of a great people. She has translated this music into the language of the piano and probably will play some of the unpublished numbers as encores Tuesday night.

Petite and fair, Miss Johnson also has been acclaimed by other royalty, playing for crowned heads in several capitals.

Since her professional debut in Paris, she has had a most interesting career for one of such winning simplicity.

Modest "Miss Mozart" speaks French, German, Swedish and the Balkan languages. Once she played a concert while the audience was guarded by soldiers with fixed bayonets and cannon boomed in the surrounding hills.

And during the Greek revolution she did a great deal of translating for foreign war correspondents. For the censor she translated many messages sent out of the war zone.

WE DRIVERS

A Series of Brief Discussions on Driving, Dedicated to the Safety, Comfort and Pleasure of the Motoring Public. Prepared by General Motors

No. 7—SLIPPERY WEATHER

ICE AND SNOW always bring problems for drivers. These problems are the result of less friction. And that is interesting, because usually we are trying to reduce friction all we can. We use ball and roller bearings to overcome friction. We smooth and polish parts to reduce friction. We put oil in our cars to avoid friction. But we can't get along without friction, just the same.

For, after all, we couldn't start a car, we couldn't stop a car, we couldn't turn a corner, if it weren't for friction. The friction between the road and our rubber tires is what gives us traction.

Most of the time we have plenty of traction. But in certain climates every year, winter comes blowing and blustering down from the North, and the first thing we know he has spread ice and snow over our roads, and our whole traction condition is changed.

But automobiles are pretty well prepared these days to meet any conditions. All we have to do is to adjust ourselves to these changed circumstances.

For instance, many skillful drivers start their cars in high gear on very slippery, icy streets. Ordinarily this would be a bad thing to do. But when our tires have to start us going on slippery ice or snow, starting in second or "high" is harmless and it does help to avoid spinning wheels, side slipping and dithering in getting under way. If you haven't tried this after stopping at intersections, you may be surprised to find out how much more quickly you get started again. Only remember to engage the clutch very slowly.

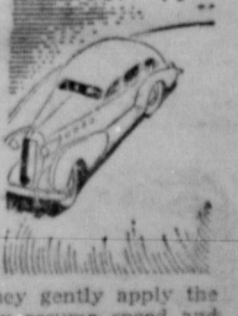

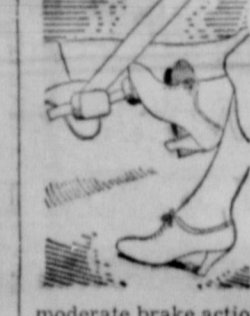

This business of starting in slippery weather can be quite a problem. But stopping is even more so. However, most good drivers agree on one method that they find quite satisfactory. First of all they begin to slow their cars down at quite a distance from where they want to stop. They press the brake lightly at first and release it almost at once. Then they press again and release quickly. By a series of brief, moderate brake actions, instead of one continuous pressure, they gradually reduce speed and can usually stop without skidding.

Many of the best drivers always make it a point not to disengage the clutch as soon as they apply their brakes, but to wait until the car has almost stopped. While this is their general practice, they say it is especially important on slippery roads, as they claim it reduces the chances of skidding. But if we use this method there is one thing we must look out for. We have to remember that on a slippery surface it is very easy to stall our engine by using our brakes when the clutch is still engaged.

Outside of starting and stopping, most winter skidding is at turns and curves. Many good drivers tell us that they treat every slippery curve or turn as though it were going to be a stop. In other words, they approach curves using the very same system of short, moderate brake actions. The result is that when they reach the curve they are going so slowly that they can actually give the engine a little gas and put some power in the wheels. With power turning the wheels, we are not so likely to skid.

After all, the main thing to do about driving in slippery weather is just what we do about walking in slippery weather. We are all pretty careful about that. The first thing most of us do when we go out on a slippery morning is to put out one foot cautiously and get the feel of the surface to see how careful we have to be. The best drivers we know do practically the same thing with their cars. The first thing they do after they get started, is to test the surface. They make sure that there are no cars too near, and then they gently apply the brakes. If they don't skid they resume speed and apply the brakes again—this time a little more firmly.

In this way they determine the surface and know the degree of caution they must exercise to be safe. This seems like a very sensible idea.

His methods were crude--but similar to those of the Modern Gold Brick Artist. Both of these slickers fool the public.

Today's Gold Brick Artist finds it easier to prey on the Housewife who is not as well posted on the tricks of the trade. Here you find him at the door offering the bottle of silver polish--FREE.
