Three Die In Dallas Storm

Women Drown, Hail Damages Glass, Roofs

Cloudburst Swells Ravines, Crops, Flowers Beaten Down

DALLAS (AP)—A terrific hail storm and cloudburst took three lives, damaged windows and roofs, beat down crops and flowers, left hundreds homeless in and near Dallas Tuesday night.

Two women drowned in the southern part of the city, while trying to wade to safety from a stalled automobile, a swift current swept them down a ravine.

The body of a negro woman was found after water had subsided.

A. B. Jolley, Dallas county farm agent, said reports received indicated crop damage was confined principally to communities at the edge of Dallas. Traffic was paralyzed at the peak of the storm.

Seven-Point Plan Framed By Statesmen

Lower Tariffs, Higher Silver Prices Among Objectives

WASHINGTON (AP)—The United States and England lined up Wednesday for a seven-point world economic recovery program embracing tariff reductions and higher silver prices.

President Roosevelt and Premier MacDonalld ended their conversations with the declaration that an understanding would be sought at the June world economic conference.

In a statement distributed at the White House they also declared for increase of the general level of commodity prices, world expansion of credit and capital expenditures by governments to stimulate business.

MacDonalld told newspapermen his conversation had been "fruitful in a way I hardly believed possible when I came."

WASHINGTON (AP)—New obstacles Wednesday threatened more delay before the senate can vote on the administration inflation bill. Senator Connally of Texas started debate for the bill's supporters but probability of further Republican speeches in opposition and a possible attack by Senator Carter Glass indicated the talk would not end Wednesday as hoped.

Prices

The real reason for Mr. Roosevelt's bold inflation program has been kept fairly confidential. Public excuses have been offered that he was afraid Congress would run wild on inflation. Also that he wanted a bargaining point with Great Britain.

The first excuse was shallow. Nearly everybody in Congress was an inflationist but no two could agree on how to do it. Those who have their ears to the ground know there was very little danger of Congress agreeing on any inflation legislation and Mr. Roosevelt still has the veto power.

The gain of a bargaining point with Premier MacDonalld was only a result, not a cause.

Those who have confidence of Mr. Roosevelt know what he had his eye on all the time was commodity prices.

His Farm Bill was not bringing the desired results. The markets did not have the confidence in it which his intercollegiate brain trust had. Wheat went up, but not because of the Farm Bill. Its advances were clearly traceable to had crop reports. Other markets looked at the bill and sagged.

Mr. Roosevelt is no the kind of a man to let failure dishearten him. He went off on another track in a stronger way. His inflationary program would do practically all that the Farm Bill sought but would have failed to do.

Congressional leaders were told confidentially to pass the Farm Bill as long as it had gone so far. It will be used to handle any surplus crop difficulties which arise.

The truth is that many big business men foresaw another collapse in July of the measures in contemplation would have been strong enough to stop it. The closed banks were not being reopened. They could not be reopened in many instances unless commodity prices improved. Much of the collateral of these closed banks was in ware house receipts, depreciated stocks and real estate mortgages. Four billion was tied up in that category.

Only inflation could reach that

Resignations of E. V. Spence, chairman, Shine Phillips and E. J. Mary were tendered by letter to the governor through the Big Spring Chamber of Commerce Tuesday evening. Resignation of C. T. Watson was presented verbally and will be forwarded in writing to the governor. The fifth member of the committee, County Judge H. R. Debenport, filed his resignation with Chairman Spence two weeks ago.

In their letter of resignation Messrs. Spence, Mary and Phillips said that they had given their services since late last year, serving to April 1 as the local unit necessary when the West Texas Chamber of Commerce took charge of application and distribution of funds to West Texas counties by request of Governor Sterling.

Since April 1, when the West Texas Chamber withdrew as the agency on behalf of the region before the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and a state relief organization was set up by Governor Ferguson, the committee has continued in force by request of Mrs. Ferguson.

A complete audit of all funds handled by this committee has been made by Nolan C. Phillips company, certified public accountants, and the auditors' report will be issued to the public by May 1, when the resignations become effective. In private conversation members

Concessions Not Sold For WTCC Meet

Cafes, Hotels, Agree Not To Hike Prices During Convention

No concession rights are sold by the West Texas Chamber of Commerce, or the local arrangements committees for annual convention of the WTCC.

This statement was made Wednesday for information of the public generally and many who have inquired about concessions. This policy is followed because it is desired that business men who operate establishments regularly and permanently benefit as much as possible from the convention.

Of course, the convention committee has no authority over any private enterprise, it was pointed out. City ordinances governing erection of "stands" etc. should be examined by any one contemplating such projects.

While the convention committee obviously cannot govern any private project that might be started for the purpose of selling food, or novelties or anything of that kind during the convention, the committee expressed the hope that since cafes, coffee shops, hotels and other places had agreed not to hike prices during the convention, organizations would cooperate as fully and arrange insofar as possible not to have cooperative food sales and other similar affairs during the convention.

Visualizing And Promoting Largest Convention Of Southwest Calls For Thousands Of Details As W. T. C. C. Conclave Leaders Prepare For May 11-13

Visualizing and planning a modern structure is a tedious task, but visualizing and promoting a convention—there's a job that would drive an architect to insanity.

One should happen around to the Chamber of Commerce office these days and listen to the drone of a battery of typewriters, the expressive tones of an official dictating letters, the groans of a mimeograph machine turning out copies of form letters and publicity, the constant ring of two telephones. "Chamber of commerce... Mr. Hopkins... Just a moment please... get those forms. Florence... Watson, what about that letter from... where does this go?... take a letter, please... Alice, where did we put that mailing list?... Dear Sir... a busy place, this convention headquarters.

Six weeks before the West Texas Chamber of Commerce fifteenth annual convention was scheduled to open here, the regional office stationed Maury Hopkins, assistant manager, in Big Spring to supervise plans for the gathering.

He came fortified with data schedules, systematic calendars and a bevy of file cases. Since establishment of convention headquarters here April 3, Hopkins and the regular chamber force have been daily gathering momentum.

Publicity is sent almost everyday to thirty-nine daily newspapers serving West Texas and to three news services: The Associated Press, United Press, International News Service. A total of 190 weekly papers are served with convention propaganda by the office here. To date seventy-four stories bearing a Big Spring date line have been mailed out.

According to a previously arranged schedule, form letters on different phases of the convention go out

One I Love

By LARRY LOU BOOKMAN

Janet said goodby and put down the telephone. Betty's words had both cheered and frightened her. It was good to know he believed in her but if he were right about the police, if they failed to clear up the mystery, she knew she would never be free of this cloud of guilt. They could not prove she took the pearls but they would believe it. Everyone would believe it. Mrs. Curtis would believe it. Mrs. Curtis who was trying to pretend her suspicions had not been aroused. Betty, openly accusing. These policemen and the others who might come for her at any minute.

"They've got to find them!" she told herself, gripping her hands together. "They've got to!"

She walked to the window and looked out the lawn. Here and there were patches of shade and a faint breeze rustled the leaves of the trees. Outside everything was quiet, peaceful.

It would have been good to get outdoors, to feel that warm sunshine, to walk and walk until weariness overtook her. Janet turned away quickly. She could not go out. This room with its luxurious furnishings was a prison and she was a prisoner.

She felt something beside her and looked down. Buster, the Persian cat, rubbed his arched back against her and looked up coaxingly. Janet stooped and picked him up. "What's the matter, Buster?" she asked. "I don't see that you have anything to complain of."

She rubbed his head and the cat, in response, raised his pink nose high in the air. Buster purred in deepest contentment. There was nothing whatever the matter so far as he was concerned.

Janet was sitting with the cat in her arms when Lucy appeared suddenly in the doorway. "Oh, Miss Hill!" she exclaimed. "Do you know what's happened?"

Lucy's eyes were wide. She crossed the room quickly. "Look at this!" she said. "Frederick just gave it to me."

Into Janet's hands she thrust a newspaper. It was a folded early edition with a large picture of Betty Carlyle in the center of the first page. Above the picture were the words:

YOUNG SOCIETY MATRON REPORTS VALUED PEARL NECKLACE MISSING

"Isn't it terrible?" Lucy went on. "Does Mrs. Curtis know about it, do you suppose?"

Janet nodded. "Yes, she knows about it." The paragraphs below the picture gave a brief and somewhat garbled account of the loss of the necklace. They stated that Mrs. Carlyle had reported the disappearance of the necklace, "worth $1200," to police, that there were several "mystery angles" of the case, and that a suspect had been examined.

"Do you mean Marie?" Lucy asked excitedly. "She's the only one they could mean! My stars—"

"No, it isn't Marie," Janet told her quickly. "They think I took it."

"YOU!"

Janet's tone was flat and mechanical. "Yes. The police talked to the last night. That's where Mrs. Curtis and I were. They asked me a lot of questions and they may come any time again today."

"Oh!" There was horror in Lucy's eyes. She had drawn back and stood staring at the other girl.

"The police!" she repeated. "You mean they'll come here?"

"I guess so."

The maid continued to eye her with undisciplined alarm. "Oh, this is terrible!" she exclaimed. "If the police come here what will I do?"

"I guess you'd have to let them in," Janet told her. She was tired now. Terribly tired. She felt beaten, too. Now that the newspapers knew about it there was nothing more to hope for. They would print her name and probably her picture, being led away by the police.

"But why did you do it?" Lucy gasped. "Didn't you know you'd get caught?"

Janet looked away. "I didn't do it," she said, "but that doesn't seem to make any difference."

There was a step in the doorway and both girls turned. Mrs. Curtis was standing there. "What is it?" she asked. "Lucy, what are you so excited about?"

The maid pointed to the newspaper Janet held. "It's that," she said. "About Mrs. Carlyle's necklace."

Janet rose and handed Mrs. Curtis the newspaper. Mrs. Curtis turned a low exclamation and then uttered to Lucy. "I want all the servants to come here at once," she said. "Tell them immediately."

Five minutes later they trooped in—Frederick and Bertha and Lucy and lastly the cook. It was a brief meeting. Mrs. Curtis said that on no account were any of them to speak about the stolen necklace. No matter who asked they were to deny that they knew anything about it.

"The matter," Mrs. Curtis said, "is in the hands of the police. I do not want any more talk about it and I am particularly anxious to

Paradox Of Gold Is That Value Is Raised As Nations Reject It As Basis For Currency Systems

WASHINGTON, (UP)—Gold, a metal of romance and adventure through the ages, has grown in influence until the whole world is affected by changes in its value. It is the world's standard of value; wages, prices and the cost of living in all nations are related to it, intricately.

A paradox exists in that gold, respected as a standard by individual nations, immediately acquired a greater value. The prestige of gold has been advanced instead of injured by the events of the last three years when nation after nation has "gone off the gold standard."

On Black Friday, Sept. 24, 1929, Jay Gould and James Fisk, Jr. attempted to corner the gold market by buying all the gold in New York, $18,000,000. The value of gold rose steadily during the operation, speculators aiming to carry it from 144 to 200. Wild excitement prevailed but in the midst of the panic the United States threw $4,000,000 in gold on the market. Gould and Fisk won $11,000,000 before gold receded to its former value.

The United States no longer mints the gold dollar, which as the unit of value is supposed to weigh 25.8 grains and be 0.900 fine. Gold coins of $5, $10 and $20 are minted, known respectively as half-eagles, eagles, and double eagles.

The eagle is referred to by workers at the mint as the "goose."

Gold is not the most valuable of metals. One more valuable commercially include platinum, uranium, radium and vanadium.

White Elephant Party Given To O.C.D. Members

One of the cleverest parties of the season was that given by Miss Helen Beavers Tuesday evening for the O.C.D. Bridge Club members.

Bowls of roses decorated the rooms. It was a white elephant party. The guests were told to bring along white elephants, which they did. The packages were cleverly and attractively wrapped and at the end of the games the highest scorer down made selections of the white elephants according to the looks of the packages.

Handmade elephant tailies were used and this motif also prevailed on the scorepads. The prices had miniature elephants tied to the ribbons that were around the tissue wrapping paper.

Miss Faubion made high score and was given a set of ivory elephants. Miss Hayden cut for high and received a deck of cards. Miss Chadd made guest high and was favored with an ashtray.

A frozen salad course was served to the following guests: Misses Ethel Evans, Zelma Chadd, Jeanette Pickle; Mmes. W. M. Paulsen, George Gentry and Clarence Wear; and the following members: Misses Agnes Currie, Irene Knauer, Nell Davis, Mabel Robinson, Fern Wells, Alice Leeper, Marie Faubion, Helen Hayden, Mary McElroy and Mrs. Stanley J. Davis.

Mrs. Cleve made high score and received a bedside battery light. Mrs. Kuykendall made high guest and was given a whatnot set of frogs. Mrs. Mays received a novelty scorepad for making high cut.

After the refreshments were served little Miss Jean Porter entertained the guests with delightful dancing number.
